Steam Blasts, Electrocution Broke Strike, Inquiry Hears

Pep Talk by Rand To Operatives Cited

Labor Terror Created to Get Assignments, Witness Asserts.

By Sidney Olson.

The bloody and riotous history of what happens when Americans strike was spread on the records of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee all day yesterday as eight men—admitted labor spies, undercover men and strikebreakers—filed defiantly to the witness stand to testify.

The lurid panorama of the testimony ranged from dynamitings to riots, from the use of live steam to scald strikers to the use of high-tension wires to electrocute them, from the use of women operatives to break down the morale of strikers' wives and mothers to the use of a preacher as a "hooker," one who inveigles union men into spying on their fellows.

Developments in the testimony included:

Michael Casey, New York, strikebreaker for Railway Audit & Inspection Co., said James H. Rand, jr., president of Remington-Rand, gave 58 hired "finks" (strikebreakers) a pep talk on a train en route to his plant at Middletown, Conn., offering a $5 bonus to each "fink" who got through the picket lines into the factory.

Edmund B. McDade, also an R. & I. employe, told how he and other strikebreakers deliberately created terror in order to make corporation heads believe a strike was especially serious and therefore hire more strikebreakers.

Says Electrocutions Planned.

McDade told further how in Milwaukee, in 1934, he hired 700 "finks" for a Wisconsin Light & Power strike; how the company passed out axe handles for use; how steam hose was connected with boilers to play on strikers; and how wires were concealed in fences to electrocute pickets.

McDade, describing the planting of the high-tension wires in fences around a Wisconsin Light & Power plant in 1934, when one man was electrocuted and two burned seriously, said E. B. Way, the manager, expressed worry after this electrocution, fearing sympathizers might wreck the plant. Way ordered the lights turned out at the plant, said McDade, "so the strike breakers could do better work with axe handles on the strikers."

McDade told further how a building was dynamited by strikebreakers and the blame placed on strikers; and how a plant official's home was painted red by strikebreakers, while strike sympathizers were accused.

C. M. "Red" Kuhl, veteran strikebreaker, testified that Wallace Metcalfe, head of the Civil Service Commission in Youngstown Ohio, acted as a "hooker" in Ohio labor troubles, "hooking" a brother-in-law to act as a spy in a labor union. Kuhl said he paid the brother-in-law's wages to Metcalfe. He also told how the company was used to stir up sentiment against municipal light plants.

William Harper, special officer for the Grand Central Palace, New York, formerly a strikebreaker for the Foster Agency, told how he had recruited 150 strikebreakers with the aid of the American Legion in Trenton, N. J., to crush a 1931 highway bridge strike near there.

Md. U. Sophomores Face Investigation In Hazing Incident

A sophomore hazing party, whose members compelled a group of University of Maryland freshmen to kiss the bronze feet of the huge metal terrapin on the campus, will be subject to investigation, university officials indicated yesterday after a meeting of the Student Life committee.

President H. C. Byrd declared that he did not know whether or not disciplinary action in the case of several sophomore students questioned yesterday would be necessary.

He said, however, that it was decided at the meeting to "discontinue all activities that have to do with attempts to force compliance on the part of freshmen in so-called sophomore-freshman rules."

The hazing incident followed a general melee between upper and lower classmen in a dormitory. The tussle sent about half a dozen students to the university infirmary for treatment of cuts and bruises.

The trouble started when upper classmen, bent on enforcing the so-called "rat rules" for freshman students, invaded the dormitory. Using pieces of furniture and buckets of water, with which they doused the besiegers, the first-year men put up a determined resistance.

Finally, after a free-for-all, the freshmen were marched across the campus to the feet of the terrapin, symbol of the university. Here they were made to kiss the terrapin's feet in accordance with tradition.

Lloyd George Assails U. S. Role In World War; Johnson Replies

Ex-Premier Conspired to Make Army Cannon Fodder, Says General.

By the Associated Press.

London, Sept. 23.—A scathing criticism of Gen. John J. Pershing and of the whole American World War machine is contained in the fifth volume of the memoirs of David Lloyd-George Britain's war-time premier, to be published tomorrow.

LLOYD GEORGE.

Lloyd George's indictment of Pershing is based on what he termed the A. E. F. commander in chief's stubborn fight to keep his divisions intact instead of having them incorporated in the allied armies.

"He (Pershing) was quivering with suspicion that the British and French meant to rob him of his army," Lloyd George writes.

The Welsh statesman's caustic chronicle describes incessant disputes with Pershing and pillories "American indecision and bustling incompetency." However, he praises the courage of the American troops.

Assails War Conduct.

Lloyd-George declares large numbers of American soldiers in the Argonne were insufficiently fed, and criticizes adversely American handling of shipments of artillery, airplanes, etc.

"The result," he says, "was a fussy muddle."

Almost the whole first year of American participation in the World War, Lloyd-George writes, was "a comparatively insignificant" contribution of "a mighty republic to the struggle in France."

"It was one of the most inexplicable paradoxes of history," the account continues, "that the greatest machine-producing nation on earth failed to turn out mechanism for war after 18 months of sweating, toiling, hustling. The men placed in charge all seemed to hustle each other—but never the job."

"The equipment of the Americans, he wrote, "was a lamentable story of indecision, bustling and incompetency."

At the end of the war, he declares, half of the airplanes used by American aviators were of French or British make; no American-made field piece fired a single shot during

New York, Sept. 23.—Gen. Hugh Johnson, creator and head of the American Army's supply and traffic organization in the World War, lashed back sharply at David Lloyd George's criticism of Gen. Pershing and the American contributions to the Allied cause.

JOHNSON.

"Mr. Lloyd George himself was involved in a conspiracy to have Gen. Pershing supplanted by Gen. Peyton March, so that American soldiers might be treated as cannon fodder by the British and French," said Gen. Johnson. "Gen. March, who was chief of staff here, indicated in his own book that if he had gone over he would have broken up the United States Army."

Commenting on excerpts from the fifth volume of the British war premier's memoirs, Gen. Johnson said:

"His particular assertion that the American contributions were less than the British or any others is rendered rather ridiculous by the fact that by October, 1918, the American Expeditionary Force had a greater number of men in France than ever served there in the British expeditionary force in the entire World War.

Insisted on His Orders.

Regarding Lloyd George's statement that Pershing "was quivering with suspicion," Gen. Johnson said:

"I never saw Pershing quiver, but he certainly had a right to. His original order in August, 1917, contemplated an American army under an American flag. But he found both British and French using every stratagem to have American soldiers fed into their divisions, to fight in their uniforms and under their colors.

"Gen. Pershing with the constant knowledge and approval of President Wilson, insisted on carrying out his orders, and while at every crisis he relaxed this policy as was superbly acknowledged by Gen. Foch, he did insist on the formation of American divisions, army corps and a field army.

"As to the American contribution

Board of Three Named to Guide Ship Subsidies

Roosevelt Appoints Wiley, Hamlet and Landick as 'Temporary' Unit.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 23.—President Roosevelt tonight named a three-member "temporary" maritime commission to administer the ship subsidy act. Members are Rear Admiral Henry Wiley, U. S. N., retired; Read Admiral Harry G. Hamlet, of the Coast Guard, and George Landick, jr., now in the Treasury Department.

Although no chairman was designated, Wiley is expected to act in that capacity, at least until two other members are appointed to bring the agency up to full strength provided by law.

"This temporary organization," said a White House announcement, "will start functioning immediately, setting up a skeleton force. Other members of the commission will be named in the near future."

Wiley's home is in Haverford, Pa. Hamlet lives in Chevy Chase, Md., and Landick in Kensington, Md.

Was Head of Fleet.

Wiley was at one time commander in chief of the fleet. He also has served on a number of arbitration boards in the last three years.

Hamlet is former commandant of the Coast Guard. He is due to retire from that branch of the Government October 1.

Landick, a native of Indiana, is chief of the planning section of the procurement division of the Treasury. He has had 32 years of experience in Government contract, equipment and supply work. The White House said he is "thoroughly familiar with contract law and all phases of procurement matters."

The subsidy act which the commission will administer was passed in the closing days of the last Congress.

Merger Voted Of University, Racquet Clubs

New Organization Will Be Housed at Latter, Keep Name of Former.

Two of Washington's most distinguished clubs—the Racquet and University—lost their separate identities last night when the membership of the former voted to join hands with the latter.

The new organization will be called the University Club, but will be housed at the Racquet Club. Everything will be done on a 50-50 basis, including the election of officers and the make-up of committees.

Final action on consolidation, which has been brewing since last spring, was taken last night at the Racquet Club. The move previously had been approved by the boards of both clubs and the membership of the University Club.

Economies Are Expected.

Great economies are expected to follow the merger. The physical equipment of the Racquet Club was designed to care for a membership as large as that of the combined clubs, and the overhead will be only slightly more than at present.

The old University Club will close its doors in the next few days, ending a career of 32 years. It was formed in 1904 with William Howard Taft as first president. Four years later he entered the White House.

In those days the University Club occupied a building at Sixteenth and K streets northwest. It moved to its present quarters at Fifteenth and I streets in 1913. The present president is Stanley Smith.

The Racquet Club was formed in 1920 with Col. Henry May as its first president. It built its present quarters at 1135 Sixteenth street northwest. Spencer Gordon, the present president, was chairman of last night's meeting.

Flood of Cash To U.S. Farms Starts Oct. 15

Soil Benefit Checks Will Be Sent to 6,000,000 Throughout Land.

Payments, Less Than Aid Under AAA, to Be More Widespread.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Administration's first flood of farm benefit checks will begin to course through the mails in the next two or three weeks and eventually will reach some 6,000,000 farmers, at least 1,000,000 more than were reached by the old AAA benefit payments.

Speeding up the complex work of checking farm applications for grants, officials in charge of the soil conservation program said the first scattering of checks will go out by October 15. Payments probably will not reach their peak until mid-December and some will be delayed into 1937.

Preliminary surveys indicate a far greater number of farmers will receive benefits than under any of the old AAA programs, but the payments will be for smaller amounts, officials said. New England, for example, which enjoyed a comparative small participation in former AAA programs, will get several times the volume of benefit checks it formerly received.

Seek to Offset Drought.

AAA officials are trying to include at least some of the drought-ravaged States in the first batch of checks as a relief measure, they said. Late Western crops and mechanical difficulties in checking farm performance are hindering this effort, it was said, and only a few of the drought States may receive the first payments.

Kansas, Oklahoma and Mississippi, where the field work is far advanced, were mentioned as the most likely possibilities.

AAA spokesmen deny any political motives are involved in the release of some checks on the eve of the November elections, or the inclusion of Kansas, home State of Gov. Alf Landon, in the first flow of payments.

Although "clean-up" checks are still going forward on AAA contracts negotiated before farm production control was invalidated by the Supreme Court, benefits mailed out beginning October 15 will be the first disbursed under the so-called soil conservation program.

About $470,000,000 is available to finance the payments, although out of this sum must come local and national administrative expenses, as well as payments to farmers. These must be spread thinner than the old AAA benefits. More than $500,000,000 was available under the last AAA program.

More Beneficiaries.

Department officials estimate that some 4,000,000 farms will participate in the new soil conservation, and that about 6,000,000 "farmers," owners as well as tenants, will receive benefit payments ultimately. This shows a sharp increase over beneficiaries under the last AAA program, in which 3,000,000 farms and slightly less than 5,000,000 farmers participated.

Most pronounced increase in participation will occur in the Northeastern region, from Pennsylvania to Maine, and including New England, embracing some 500,000 farms. Where only 5 to 7 per cent of the farms in this section shared in the old AAA programs about 50 per cent will participate in the new program, Secretary Wallace estimates. Farm participation in the new Federal venture is estimated at 80 per cent for the country as a whole.

Distribution of benefits to landlord and tenant is virtually the same as under the old AAA program. A cash tenant would receive the entire benefit check. Where the landlord does not furnish equipment or work stock, the payment is divided between landlord and tenant in the same ratio that the crop is divided. Where the landlord furnishes land and equipment, 50 per cent of the payment is divided as the crop is divided, and the remaining 50 per cent goes to the landlord.

Television for Functions Of Vatican Pope's Aim

Vatican City, Sept. 23 (U.P.).—Pope Pius XI hopes to have a powerful television station erected in the Vatican to enable the world to see him during important functions and outstanding events of the papal state. The Pope has consulted Guglielmo Marconi, inventor of wireless telegraphy, to further his desires.

Presidential Rivals Uphold 'A Free Press'

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 23.—President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon joined in upholding "a free press" and "liberty of the press" in the United States tonight in messages sent to an audience of 3,000 at the Herald-Tribune's forum on current problems.

Gov. Landon, in a message read to the forum by Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., Republican campaign manager in the East, said, "freedom of speech and a free press is essential to the continuation of true liberalism."

Said President Roosevelt, in a radio address from his Hyde Park home: "In the welter of passion which is apparently still inseparable from our political campaigns, you and I hear about the liberty of the press—regimentation of the press against the Government and regimentation of the press by the Government.

Proof of Statement.

"It is doubtful if the United States ever had an administration since the days when Washington was accused of despotism and aspirations to kingship that had the slightest desire to muzzle anybody. The unchecked virulence of assaults on almost every administration since the beginning of our history in itself is best proof of that statement."

The President urged that "logic" rather than "prejudice" be used to determine "the questions that are of such vital consequence to our country as a whole and to each individual thinking citizen thereof."

Landon stressed two points on which he said he felt deeply, the New Deal's "waste and extravagance" and "the narrow nationalism in its planned economy."

"It is natural, I suppose," President Roosevelt said, "in a campaign year for advocates and adversaries of any policy, or process of government to relapse into exaggeration and invective, and so becloud the controversy as to make it possible for the future of the country to be determined in rancor and temper instead of by calm deliberation and clear thinking.

Power of Press.

"I don't know that there is any actual remedy for this state of affairs, but I believe that it is within the power and the province of the press to make whatever improvement is possible. I do not think that anybody objects to a statement of opinion or an argument either pro or con, being put forth in the editorial pages provided the editorials do not contain misstatements of fact. That, unless I entirely misunderstand newspaper psychology, is what the newspaper editorial columns are for.

"I do not believe—and I do not think any disagreement is possible on this subject—that a journal's news columns ought to be tampered with, either by coloring news or by leaving out news. The news is the commodity that is marketed to the whole people."

Turning to the subject of "waste and extravagance," Gov. Landon said all Americans were glad to co-operate with the New Deal when it "was originated ostensibly to meet an emergency" and "we were ready to excuse mistakes due to urgent haste and necessary experimentation."

Habitual Thriftlessness.

"What we cannot excuse today," he continued, "is the fact that waste and extravagance and the reckless experimentation then initiated have been fastened upon Washington as the habitual thriftlessness of a prodigal government of over-expending bureaucrats.

"We Republicans are glad to express our sympathy with the many aims of the present Administration. It is when we reach the ways and means, the hard practical details, the problems of the day in Washington, the practical results, the housekeeping if you will, that we Americans, both Republicans and Democrats, part company with the

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Sept. 23.—A combination autogyro and automobile passed a maker's test successfully at suburban Horsham yesterday preparatory to its being turned over to the Department of Commerce.

The ship, designed by A. E. Larson, chief engineer of the Autogyro Co. of America, is a little wider and longer than an automobile and can be placed in an ordinary garage. It weighs 800 pounds.

When used as an automobile, its rotor blades, 33 feet in diameter, can be folded back. The 90-horsepower motor can be geared to a single rear wheel through a clutch arrangement. The change-over takes less than one minute.

James Ray, vice president of the company, said the ship was designed so that its owner might keep it in his garage, drive it to an airport, take off, fly to his destination and drive it right up to the door.

The ship has a top speed of 100 miles an hour in the air and 25 to 30 miles on the road.

Ray said the "roadable autogyro" could be produced in quantity to sell for less than $3,000.

Grand Army of Republic Marches Last Time As 100,000 Onlookers Laugh, Weep, Cheer

The shadow of what was once the greatest army of volunteers the world has ever seen crept slowly up Pennsylvania avenue yesterday as the G. A. R. marched in its seventieth and last parade.

Tears wet the cheeks of hundreds while others laughed and cheered as 355 aged men trod or rode along asphalt softened by a hot and merciless sun, over the same course they marched 70 years ago as Lincoln's victorious hosts.

Whitened heads shook on bowed shoulders, crutches tapped a storied beat, legs that had marched through Georgia faltered, but on they went, the fragments of an irresistible army which once had numbered 2,778,304. Only a few had to surrender to the power of the sun, dropping out of line one by one as they neared the White House. The rest marched to the end of their last mile together, all the way from Constitution avenue and Twelfth to Pennsylvania and Eighteenth.

Two watchers in the close-packed throngs which filled sidewalk and curb fainted from the heat and had to be taken to hospitals. Others wept openly as emotions piled up too fast to hold. Excitement fled through the crowd in gusts as drums rattled and boomed, and fifes shivered the leaves in the sycamores overhead.

Thousands of throats cheered, the hands of children delivered from school for the day clapped in bewildered applause as each new Boy Scout appeared carrying a placard with the name of the G. A. R. State post's name on it, to be followed by one or two or perhaps a dozen old men.

At 10:10 the first veteran put foot on Pennsylvania avenue. Beating "Yankee Doodle" on his ancient war drum with the same high vigor as he had in the grand review in May of '85, he stood hesitant for a moment, glanced back at the gray Capitol dome and then into the gauntlet of pressed humanity ahead. It took him a second to make up his mind to proceed, but as the applause beckoned he stepped forth into the street and the Grand Army was again passing in review on Pennsylvania avenue, led by 1936's crack Army

Italy Expected to Announce Its League Withdrawal Today

By the United Press.

Rome, Sept. 23.—It was stated reliably tonight that announcement of Italy's withdrawal from the League of Nations would be made officially before noon tomorrow.

Italy's withdrawal as a League member will come as a direct result of the Geneva assembly seating Ethiopian delegates as representatives of a sovereign state, well-informed quarters said. It was learned Premier Mussolini spent the entire evening studying official reports from Geneva.

It was understood that the official announcement of Italy's withdrawal would be issued after a conference Il Duce had scheduled with Galeazzo Ciano, Italian foreign minister, for 10 a. m.

Geneva, Sept. 23 (A).—Haile Selassie, who lost his empire to Italy, emerged victor over Premier Benito Mussolini tonight when the League of Nations Assembly, by a vote of 39 to 4, ruled Ethiopian delegates might be seated, despite Mussolini's repeated assertions he would not return to the League fold until they were barred.

The League adopted a credentials committee recommendation that the Assembly seat the Ethiopians and no' submit the question of their country's status to the World Court, a compromise tentatively advanced earlier.

The votes against seating the Ethiopians came from Ecuador, Hungary, Austria and Albania. Six countries, including Ethiopia, refrained from voting. The necessary majority was 22 votes. A roll call on the credentials committee report, demanded by Hungary, Austria and Albania, forced the vote.

Thus did the League of Nations decide it would be better to forfeit the support of Italy and Mussolini than to bar the Ethiopians in a diplomatic maneuver, which smaller nations insisted would have been equivalent to League recognition of Italian conquest of Ethiopia.

The credentials committee spokesmen, however, in urging adoption of their recommendation, emphasized that their decision would apply only to the present annual session, and that "nothing has been done to prejudice the future."

The committee session saw representatives of larger powers, as well as of smaller countries championing the Ethiopian cause, although the majority of first powers previously had been represented as believing it would be better for world peace to bar the Ethiopians than to incur Mussolini's added displeasure by seating them.

"Enough of this nonsense! There never has been any sufficient ground to unseat the Ethiopian delegation."

Russia's foreign commissar, Maxim Litvinoff, also backed the Ethiopians to the utmost.

With smaller nations fighting bitterly for Ethiopia, it was disclosed that at times the debates became so heated that one or two states threatened to resign if Ethiopia was shut out.

Envoy Threatens To Leave Nanking

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Shanghai, Thursday, Sept. 24.—Japan today moved to carry out her threat to occupy all strategic points in China unless the Chinese government was able to make effective its repeated promises to end anti-Japanese agitation throughout the country immediately.

During the day Japanese armed forces occupied parts of two of China's greatest cities—Shanghai and Hankow—and Shigeru Kawagoe, the ambassador in Nanking, threatened to break off all negotiations with China and leave the capital.

Aroused by the shooting last night of a Japanese bluejacket by Chinese, strong contingents from Japanese warships took over control of the Japanese defense area of Shanghai's International Settlement.

Likely to Resort to Force.

The spokesman for the Japanese Embassy in Nanking announced:

"Our indignation at this latest outrage is unbounded. We can no longer trust China's assurances and we must regretfully prepare to take whatever action we may consider necessary."

The spokesman's statement, in view of Japan's past performances, was taken to mean that Tokyo was convinced China could not afford protection to Japanese lives in China, and that Japan intended to suppress anti-Japanese agitation throughout China by force.

Japanese authorities in Shanghai announced that a "stern policy" would be enforced at once. Consul Teraski sent formal notes to the municipal council of the International Settlement and the municipal government of the Chinese city asking their co-operation in the search for the murderer or murderers of the sailor.

Warships were moved upstream to anchorages off the Bund near the Japanese consulate and the embassy. The flagship Idzumo was directly opposite the embassy buildings and a detail of 50 men was sent ashore to patrol the embassy grounds until dawn.

It was understood the Japanese permanent naval commander was prepared to announce independent measures for the protection of Japanese citizens in Shanghai during the day. These measures would be taken by Japan alone rather than following the usual plan for joint international action in matters affecting the settlement.

The action was tantamount to a declaration of martial law. No such declaration was made, however, since the Japanese, by agreement, have the right to use armed forces in their defense area at any time they see fit.

Seaman Wounded.

The seaman, Asamitsu Taminato, was shot while walking in the Japanese area of the international concession. Japanese said Chinese fired on the sailor and two companions without warning. Taminato was shot in the chest, and Japanese said he was "fatally wounded." His two companions were shot in the arms. One Chinese suspect was arrested.

Several hundred sailors were landed from Japanese warships in the Whangpoo River, which runs through the concession, bringing the total number of the naval landing force to about 2,500.

The shooting culminated a series of attacks on Japanese during the past month, including the murder of a consular policeman in Hankow; two Japanese newspapermen in Chengtu, capital of Szechuan Province; the murder of a Japanese druggist in the south, at Pakhoi, up the Pearl River from Canton, and attacks on Japanese at scattered points in north China.

The attacks were ascribed to a general increase of anti-Japanese agitation throughout China, partly because of the anniversary this month of the Mukden incident, which resulted in the occupation of Manchuria by the Japanese army and eventual creation of the Japanese-controlled state of Manchukuo.

The situation is not dissimilar from that of January, 1932, except for the fact that now there are no Chinese troops in the areas adja-

Capital Transit Is Granted Plea For 1-Man Cars

By James D. Secrest.

The Public Utilities Commission late yesterday granted, with restrictions, the petition of the Capital Transit Co. to purchase and recondition 20 Providence-type one-man used street cars and, without restriction, the application to adapt the 20 streamlined President's conference cars to one-man operation.

Restrictions placed on the first phase of the order, were that the second-hand cars, built in 1924-25, must replace obsolete one-man trolleys now in service, some of which are more than 30 years old, and that any further additions of one-man cars must be of the type "equivalent or superior to the President's conference car."

The net effect of the order, thus, is to add but 20 one-man cars to the transit system, and that through conversion of present two-man cars, and to improve some of the present one-man car equipment.

Over-riding testimony and arguments presented by People's Counsel William A. Roberts, the Federation of Citizens Association, the Central Labor Union and others, the commission declared in its findings that one-man cars are as safe and only slightly slower than two-man cars.

71 Now in Service.

As there are now 71 one-man cars in operation in the District, the effect of the order will be to increase the number to 91. Of the 71 in service, 27 were purchased new and 44 are conversions of two-man cars or reconditioned Providence trolleys.

The order probably will be contested by Roberts, who is now in Georgetown Hospital, and by the

Attack, However, Expected to Wait Until They Relieve Alcazar.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Lisbon, Sept. 23.—Spanish rebels closed in on Madrid tonight. The capital was surrounded, except for an open door for escape eastward to Valencia and Alicante, Mediterranean seaports.

The point at which the insurgents were nearest Madrid, according to confirmed neutral dispatches, was 36 miles distant at San Martin. One of the encircling columns was more than 50 miles from the threatened capital.

Madrid's Socialist-Communist Government was aware of its extreme peril, although optimistic communiques still were issued by the war ministry. Urgent orders mobilizing every available man to defend the city were being enforced, with military patrols searching cafes and homes for recruits.

Toledo, ancient former imperial city, also was in imminent danger of capture, with rebels nearing the outskirts.

Strong insurgent forces held the mountains north and west of Madrid, within sight of the capital with binoculars. From the southwest advanced the rebel conquerors of Talavera and Maqueda. A column from this army, striking south from Maqueda, neared Toledo to relieve the besieged defenders of the Alcazar.

Government militia there, repulsed time and again during the ten weeks' siege, were in danger of being cut off from Madrid and their supply bases.

On the north coast, Gen. Emilio Mola's columns tightened their ring around Bilbao, in which are cooped up a loyalist army of 40,000 and a civilian population of more than 300,000. Rebel warships prevent escape by sea, and Mola has issued an ultimatum that the city will be destroyed by artillery fire unless it surrenders by Friday.

Mrs. Simpson, Ex-Baltimorean, Guest of Edward VIII at Castle

By the United Press.

Balmoral Castle, Scotland, Sept. 23.—The Court Circular today announced that Mrs. Ernest Simpson, former Baltimore, Md., woman, had arrived to be the guest of King Edward VIII during his vacation stay here.

Mrs. Simpson accompanied the King on his recent holiday trip through southern Europe. She vacationed with the monarch last year, when he was Prince of Wales. Her husband, an Englishman, is a broker in London.

King Edward made several changes in the arrangements at Balmoral on his arrival. One of them was to oust a servant from a small bedroom that caught the ruler's eye and order plumbers to install a bathroom, so that the King could use the bedroom himself. He decided that the spacious royal bedroom used by his father, King George, would make an excellent guest room.

Mrs. Simpson was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Herman L. Rogers, of New York.

Mrs. Simpson was born in Baltimore, the daughter of Wallis Warfield. He died when she was 3 years old. Her mother was Mrs. Alice Montague Raisin, who had remarried.

In 1916 the Baltimore beauty was married to Lieut. E. Winfield Spencer, U. S. N. They were divorced in the early 20's, after which Mrs. Simpson traveled extensively. She met her present husband, a Briton, who was educated at Harvard, in London. They were married in 1928. Since then she has maintained a residence in London.

Landon's Farm Speech Target Of Democrats

Has No Program, Iowan Says of Kansan's Plan; Jones Speaks Today.

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 23.—With their first reply to Gov. Alf M. Landon's farm program already entered by Lieut. Gov. Nels G. Kraschel, Iowa Democrats looked today to Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, for the National Administration's answer.

Jones is scheduled to speak at Keokuk and Des Moines tomorrow afternoon and night.

(Secretary of Agriculture Wallace said yesterday he will discuss Gov. Landon's views on agriculture on the radio tomorrow night, "and at greater length in the Middle West later on.")

Kraschel, talking on a five-station Iowa radio hookup an hour and a quarter after Landon concluded his Des Moines address last night, declared the Kansas Governor's program "in the main" is a "no program."

"I have listened intently to the long-awaited statement of Gov. Landon on his agricultural program," said Kraschel, Democratic candidate for Governor. "I find he is against the triple A. He says the farmer has no right to control production. He is against the soil conservation act. He says it was a 'stop-gap and a subterfuge.' He is against effective corn loans.

Robinson Critical.

New York, Sept. 23 (AP).—Senator Joseph T. Robinson said today the farm program of Gov. Alf M. Landon, made known last night, "is inconsistent with his proposal to balance the Nation's budget."

Roper Is Dubious.

By the Associated Press.

Commenting on a proposal by Gov. Alf M. Landon to warehouse feed reserves on the farm, Secretary Roper said yesterday he did not think the "common run of farmers" would be equipped to do this.

Campaign Gift Critics Assailed By Rockefeller

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 23.—John D. Rockefeller, jr., tonight struck back at Democratic criticism of his contributions to the Republican campaign fund in Maine.

The statement follows:

"The criticisms of the contributions made last month to the Republican Party in the State of Maine by Mrs. Rockefeller, my son John and me (my father made no such contribution) merit comment only because there is involved in them a question as to the right of American citizens to contribute to the political party of which they are members. We have all our lives been members of the party to which we contributed.

"It was more than a quarter of a century ago that I first purchased property in the State of Maine and started to make there my summer residence. Since that time Mrs. Rockefeller, my children and I have been in Maine a part of each year, staying often three or four months at a time. We are intensely interested in the State and all that concerns its welfare.

"However, these considerations were not alone responsible for the contributions in question. We had even more impelling motives. We believe that the maintenance of Democratic government requires that groups of citizens shall have the right to submit to the voters such information and argument as are in their opinion needed for correct decisions on public issues. Without such exchange of information and full discussion by all political parties our country would be in peril. We know of no better way in which both sides of each question can be presented under free government than by political parties. And we know no method of meeting the costs of gathering such information and presenting it, without danger to the republic, other than through contributions by individuals to such parties.

"We believe not only that it is our right as citizens to make such contributions as we wish toward the legitimate expenses of the political party in whose principles and leadership we have faith, but also that it is our clear duty to do so. We further believe that the exercise of this right and the performance of this duty by all citizens should be encouraged rather than criticized.

"Because we feel that the political parties are the proper channels for the dissemination of information and the discussion of political issues, the members of my family and I have made no contributions whatever to other organizations which are taking a part, large or small, in the present campaign."

Politics and People

Candidates Permit Followers to Capitalize on Fake Campaign Issues.

By Franklyn Waltman

POLITICAL issues which seem to have the greatest influences on large masses of voters usually are based on erroneous facts, are inconsequential or in some other respect deserve to be labeled as "fake issues."

WALTMAN.

The reason is that the electorate more readily responds to issues built around its prejudices or its pocketbook nerve and the politicians are quick to take advantage of those nerve centers, even if the facts do not support them. Presidential candidates rarely indulge in such activities—but they never seek to deter the shock troops of their parties from doing so.

Much emphasis is now being placed by the lesser Republican orators on the increase in cost of living. The Republican headquarters is issuing tons of attractively printed literature which contends that taxes are responsible for increased living costs—and it is even suggested that the New Deal is responsible for virtually all the taxes which figure in the cost of a loaf of bread or beef steak.

This is an easy gospel to preach. It conforms to what most housewives know and complain about to their husbands—that the cost of a full market basket this fall is greater than it was a year ago or two years ago. And many housewives feel aggrieved and are looking around for someone to blame for this increased cost. Indeed, the opinion seems widespread among many people that the cost of food today is greater than it was in 1929.

The New Dealers have been somewhat alarmed about the progress the Republicans are making with this issue and they have set to work to get the facts before the country. Thus speaking at the New York Herald Tribune Forum, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace emphasized that despite the marked improvement in farm income and two "terrific droughts" within three years "food prices this summer have been from 15 to 20 per cent below their depression level."

He added that "between 1933 and 1936 food prices have barely kept pace with general economic recovery as measured by the earning power of the employed city consumer." He sought to make more graphic his contentions with this illustration:

"The city wage earner who was getting on the average $110 a month in 1929, was getting only $65 a month in March, 1933, but by July of this year was getting $97 a month. But in terms of purchasing power, the wage earner's present $97 a month is the equivalent of 120 of the 1929 dollars if spent for food. In other words, the average employed wage earner can buy more food today than he could at the peak of city prosperity in 1929."

Mr. Wallace's statement was so contrary to the generally held belief that food prices now approximate or exceed the 1929 level that recourse was had to the cold statistical records of the Government tabulating agencies. They sustained Mr. Wallace's contentions—although it is doubtful whether he could make the same argument six months hence, because the full effect of this year's drought will not be felt on farm prices—chiefly meats—until next year. The reason most housewives take a different view of the situation is that they compare today's food prices with those which prevailed in the fall of 1932 and the spring of 1933. They leave out of consideration the fact that individual earnings also have increased between 1933 and the present.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics index for earnings per employed person in factories in 1929 was 100. By March, 1933, it had dropped to 59, and in July of this year had risen to 88, thus compelling the conclusion that employed factory workers in July received 88 per cent as much as they did in 1929. Meanwhile, the bureau's retail food price index was 102 in 1929; it dropped to 58 per cent in March, 1933, and last July reached 82. The index for other living costs last July was 83 per cent of what they were in 1928.

As the result of a study based on these figures, H. L. Bean, economic adviser to the AAA, concluded that prices of cereal and bakery products in July were 7 per cent below the same month of 1929; meats, 25 per cent below; dairy products, 22 per cent below; eggs, 26 per cent below; fruits and vegetables, 25 per cent below; beverages, 40 per cent below; fats and oils, 21 per cent below, and sugar and sweets, 11 per cent below.

"Compared with these price percentages below 1929," Mr. Bean asserted, "wage earnings for July, 1926, as compared with July, 1929, were only 12 per cent less. It is thus clear that for all groups of foodstuffs, except cereal and bakery products, factory earnings per person employed have a greater purchasing power than in 1929."

All of these computations, it should be pointed out, are made on the basis of factory workers' wages. Only approximately one-fourth of those gainfully employed, however, work in factories. But corresponding increases in wages have occurred, generally speaking, in other divisions of employment.

The wage for common labor on road work in 1929 averaged 39 cents an hour. It is now 40 cents, according to the Commerce Department's survey of current business. Wages of railway workers were not reduced to the extent of factory workers. The number of persons now employed receiving less than 88 per cent of their 1929 earnings is not large.

Those who are unemployed, those on WPA relief rolls and those now employed but receiving less than 88 per cent of their 1929 earnings suffer from the increased costs of food in the last three years—but they are a small minority.

Indeed, most of the complaining about food prices comes from families where the bread earner had the good fortune not to have his salary cut more than 10 or 15 per cent during the depression—and this in many cases has been restored. Such families became accustomed to buying larger or better market baskets and thus they are being forced to abandon the higher standards of living—resulting from low prices—which they enjoyed during the depth of the depression.

Thus when examined in the light of the known statistics, charges that the New Deal has been responsible for increasing the cost of eating out of proportion to earnings is to raise a false issue. But it is doubtful whether the New Deal can get the explanation across to voters aggrieved by increasing food costs. Their point is that "food is higher today than three years ago"—and they are right, as far as they go.

Landon Meets Iowa Leaders; Speech Praised

By Felix Bruner.

A Staff Correspondent.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 23.—While Gov. Alf M. Landon took a day off from his speaking campaign, both Republicans and Democrats in this corn-belt capital sought anxiously today to learn the reaction to the current political scramble for the rural vote. Frankly basing their calculations on the theory that much of the farm vote will go to the highest bidder, they were busy analyzing the Landon program, as outlined in the speech last night, and comparing it with Roosevelt performance.

Meanwhile, the Republican candidate spent the day meeting farm leaders, editors of rural newspapers and farm journals, and Iowa's Republican nabobs. He had breakfast early in the day with the Republican State committee members, and he had lunch with farmers and farm editors. In between he conferred with individuals, including George N. Peek, once head of the Roosevelt AAA; John Wallace, former editor of the Iowa Farmer and an uncle of Secretary Wallace, and Dennis Hogan, former member of the Federal Land Bank Board.

Awaits Second Talk.

Peek said he believed Landon had made "a very good speech," but he added he would not make up his mind as to whether he would actively support the Republican candidate until he had heard his speech on reciprocal trade agreements at Minneapolis tomorrow night.

"The farm problem and foreign trade are tied up together," Peek said. "That's why I want to hear Landon's foreign-trade speech before I commit myself."

The former AAA head said that should he decide to support the Kansas Governor he would give his indorsement on the radio next week.

Peek added that there is always a possibility of obtaining foreign trade, "but a merchant cannot do business if he locks his door and throws away the key."

"That's what we have done," he said.

He said that, with the exception of the Cuban agreement, reciprocal trade agreements are not reciprocal. He said he believed the agreement with Canada would have a considerable effect upon the election in favor of Landon.

Hogan, after a conversation with Landon, said the Governor "seemed to have well-thought-out convictions on farming, business and government." He added he believed the program outlined by Landon in his speech last night was "absolutely sound and workable."

"The farmers," he said, "are not excited. They are not going to vote emotionally. Most of them say they never knew anybody to better his condition by waste and extravagance."

Wallace said the outstanding service to farmers by the Roosevelt Administration was the corn loan program and he believed that would be carried on under Landon's plan for amendment of the warehousing act.

The Governor's pledge that Federal emergency relief measures will be continued as long as necessary is significant and encouraging," Wallace added. "On the whole it seemed to me that Gov. Landon has a good understanding of the necessity of protecting agriculture both from the standpoint of the farmer and of the laborer."

In a short talk at the luncheon of Iowa editors, Landon recalled the Secretaries of Agriculture who had come from this State, listing Wilson, Meredith and Wallace.

"Wallace has done some good things," he said. "He took advantage of the Iowa warehousing act and I took advantage of it, too, and had it enacted in Kansas. Now we believe a Federal act would be of advantage. This is an example of the value of the laboratories of the State."

Impartial political observers here feel that today Landon and Roosevelt are running neck-and-neck in the State. Polls in farming communities conducted by the Des Moines Tribune give the President a slight edge, but many feel that Landon may have the lead in the cities. They agree that much depends upon the ability of the candidates to "sell" their farm programs.

The plan, as Landon pointed out, is different from anything before attempted. It differs from the New Deal AAA plan in that the latter attempted to prevent surplus for which no market existed. It differs from the McNary-Haugen plan in that the latter proposed to remove the surplus through export subsidies. The export debenture plan sought the same end in a different way.

Landon's plan more nearly resembles proposals for a two-price system, one for American consumption and one for export, but the two-price plan contemplated price fixing, while Landon merely proposes a subsidy or benefit payment on the portion of crops domestically consumed. Thus the Landon plan would appear to encourage unlimited production, the direct antithesis of the Roosevelt idea. Democrats already are combatting this suggestion by recalling difficulties brought about by overproduction during the Hoover Administration and at other times.

The Republican candidate has hinted, however, at a system of limiting production through land conservation and a land use program. This would have a natural tendency, if carried far, to cut the size of crops. Landon also would care for some of the surplus through encouragement of more commercial uses for farm products and the encouragement of the planting of new crops.

The Campaign Arena

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Sept. 23.—Official Wayne County (Detroit) primary returns, certified today, cut 3,799 votes from the total Louis B. Ward, National Union for Social Justice candidate, received for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator.

The revised figures increased the plurality of Representative Prentiss M. Brown, the apparent winner, to 7,984.

Ward petitioned for a recount last week when it appeared he had lost by less than 4,000 votes.

Dallas, Tex., Sept. 23 (AP).—Mrs. Florence Dodgers, prominent clubwoman, said today she would take the place in the Democratic national speaking program of Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen Rohde.

Mrs. Rodgers said she would make one address at Kansas City and three in Kansas.

Boston, Sept. 23 (AP).—The Massachusetts Republican Committee announced today Jesse Owens, colored Olympic star, would speak here September 28, under the auspices of the National Republican Committee. It said Owens is to make a series of addresses in the East in behalf of the Presidential candidacy of Gov. Alf M. Landon.

St. Louis, Sept. 27 (AP).—President Roosevelt has received the indorsement of the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers by a unanimous vote of the 200 delegates attending the organization's twenty-fifth convention, it was disclosed here tonight.

Union leaders said the organization has about 20,000 members.

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Sept. 23 (AP).—Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator, today told reporters he was not on a "political debating tour."

"I refuse to argue the merits of WPA projects on a political basis," he said.

Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, in a speech at Phoenix last night, said:

"It would appear you people just received $85,000 worth of stadium and $115,000 worth of dedication."

Hamilton Charges Elector Aided Reds

New York, Sept. 23 (AP).—John D. M. Hamilton, Republican national chairman, asserted in a statement today that President Roosevelt was "retaining" as one of his Presidential electors in New York State "a man who rendered financial aid to Communists in Spain."

The elector, Hamilton said, was David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union.

Dubinsky—as were Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, and four other persons prominent in labor circles—was accepted as an elector by the Democratic State committee at a meeting last month.

Atlantic Hurricane Moves on Bermuda

By the United Press.

Jacksonville, Fla., Sept. 23.—A tropical storm of small diameter, but carrying destructive hurricane winds at its center bore down in the direction of Bermuda tonight.

A late afternoon advisory, issued by the Federal hurricane warning system, located the hurricane about 200 to 250 miles west of Bermuda and moving in the general direction of the tiny islands.

President Talks With Advisers At Home Today

Personal Participation in Campaign Likely to Be Discussed.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 23.—Leading up to a major political conference tomorrow with key Democratic chieftains, President Roosevelt today looked into party prospects in New York State.

With two old friends from his home county, Mr. Roosevelt surveyed possibilities of swinging the State's 47 electoral votes into the Democratic column. The friends were Judge John E. Mack and James Townsend, Dutchess County Democratic chairman. Both are from nearby Poughkeepsie.

The discussions set the stage for tomorrow's gathering of key political advisers. It was expected to touch party finances and strategy and perhaps bring to a head plans for the President's personal participation between October 2 and November 3 in the campaign for his re-election.

Visitors Are Listed.

Of the 10 or 12 party leaders scheduled to assemble in the library of Mr. Roosevelt's Hudson River Home, these were listed definitely in advance:

James A. Farley, chairman, and W. Forbes Morgan, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee; Vincent Dalley, former vice president of the Democratic State committee, and Senators Byrnes, of South Carolina; Robinson, of Arkansas, and Guffey, of Pennsylvania.

The last two, respectively, are Senate majority floor leader and chairman of the Democratic senatorial campaign committee.

Officials here intimated several other national committee executives might appear, including L. W. Robert, jr., secretary; Charles T. Michelson, publicity director, and Frank Walker, finance committee head.

Doctor Seeks Boy To Grow Superman With Ape Glands

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Sept. 23.—Dr. Serge Voronoff, of ape gland and rejuvenation fame, today announced he was confident he could develop a superman if he were permitted to transplant chimpanzee glands to a 10-year-old boy.

"My biggest plan is the development of a super-human type by operating on a 10-year-old boy," Dr. Voronoff said in an interview.

"If any mother would entrust her child to me she might be the means of establishing a new type of human far superior to the normal man."

Early Typist Death Solution Forecast

Detectives investigating the brutal slaying of Mrs. Florence Goodwin, 43-year-old Government typist, yesterday denied published reports the murderer could have gained entrance through a skylight door.

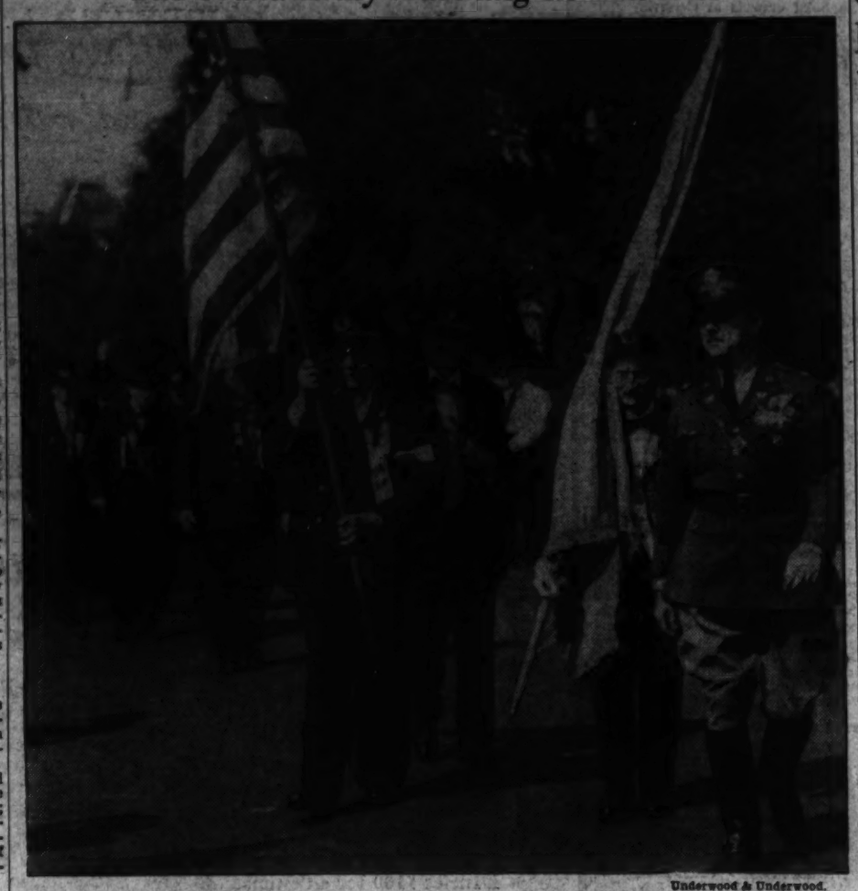
The Grand Army Marching Its Last Mile



Underwood & Underwood.

A few of what once was the world's largest volunteer army formed a thin wavering line of blue down Pennsylvania avenue yesterday in what probably will be the last parade of the defenders of the Union. A throng estimated at 100,000 persons saw the parade.

One of Jefferson Davis' Captors in March

Truman O. Weber, of Hastings, Mich., was the only man in the parade who fought after the war was ended. Under Gen. Wilson in Georgia "with 60,000 of the finest soldiers who ever straddled a horse," he fought until April 16, 1865, though Lee had surrendered on April 9. "We took Columbus, Ga., on the sixteenth," he said, "but when we got to Macon the rebels wouldn't fight. They told us there was an armistice but we didn't know what that meant. Later in the day they said Lee had surrendered then we knew what they were talking about." Weber was in the troop which captured Jefferson Davis after the war.

• • • •

The torn scarlet colors of a Massachusetts regiment were one of two battle flags in the parade. The other was carried by Lewis Easterly, of Gunnison, Ohio, who said he has had to give up drum playing because he beat the only one he owns "all to pieces."

• • • •

One old veteran pooh-poohed machine guns to a smart young officer. Said he: "Say, young feller, one of Grant's shells would blow that dang little thing to smithereens."

• • • •

I. W. Johnston, of Martinsville, W. Va., had the longest beard in the parade. It was a handsome affair that reached almost down to his lowermost medal.

• • • •

Thomas Carter, of Parkersburg, W. Va., is the only one-legged veteran here. "I usually march," he said, waving a crutch, "but it was too hot."

• • • •

One veteran has carried the wolf-tail craze which has bitten many motorists to its newest extreme. He has a fine tail pinned to his hat.

• • • •

"Too bad the President wasn't here to greet us," said Andrew Lester, of Brooklyn. "Guess he figured he'd get out of town so's he wouldn't lose any votes by seeming to take sides against the South."

• • • •

A third army marched yesterday, but no one paid them any heed. They were the "white wings" of the Street Cleaning Department, who cleaned up Pennsylvania avenue's litter after the crowd departed.

• • • •

Statistics at the Pension Office show that practically none of the 9,000 veterans living today can expect to be alive by 1940. The vets violently damn the statistics.

• • • •

Many of the veterans in the reviewing stand were openly derisive of the marchers in the army of 1936, who were about 10 per cent out of step. Officers alibied that there were "too many bands—half are keeping step with one band, half with another." Whatever the cause, the result was route-step in a parade.

• • • •

"Ship ahoy!" shrilled half a dozen old soldiers when the Navy marched by. This was considered a great joke and they laughed among themselves for five minutes.

• • • •

Most of the many veterans who failed to attend the convention stayed away because they need money, and not because of feebleness, according to Commander Oley Nelson.

• • • •

Most of the five allied groups of the G. A. R. contented themselves with watching the parade. Some marched. The Sons of Union Veterans in peaked caps, dark blue coats and light blue trousers gave an idea of what the Boys in Blue looked like 75 years ago. None of the organizations conducted any business yesterday.

G. A. R. Marches For Last Time; 100,000 Watch

Little handfuls of men appeared for each State. At the start they were waving to the crowd, smoking, laughing and talking with spectators, but as the long blocks to Fourteenth street ground slowly underfoot, they grew tired and about 50 had to make use of the motors used in modern warfare to negotiate the slight incline alongside the Treasury, but they got out at the corner of New York avenue and continued on foot again, hell bent for the White House, no matter how weak they were.

Heat Forces Many Indoors.

A large group of the old soldiers was not so impressed with the ceremony as their comrades and remained in their hotels. "As many stayed around the Mayflower as marched in the parade," said Miss Katherine Flood, secretary to the G. A. R. "They went out the door and felt the heat, or couldn't find a car ready and turned around and came back in. One parade more or less means nothing to them at their time of life."

Oley Nelson, commander in chief of the G. A. R., rode. He stuck his snowy hair and little goatee through the window of his long, black sedan and smiled continuously all the way up the Avenue, nodding to everyone and dipping a flag he held over the running board.

Ambulances whisked back and forth along the line of march. Newsreel trucks, police on motorcyles, photographers' flashing bulbs, all served to point the contrast between this day and those of May 23-24 of '65.

At the reviewing stand in front of the White House the wide-spaced ranks for the most part broke up. Sons and daughters and relatives seated tier on tier called out to their heroes to stop and come in out of the sun, and most of them did. They seemed to show no regret or sentimentality at that moment, the moment when they split ranks for the last time. To them it seemed just the end of a long walk.

Hazen Greets Veterans.

Commissioner Hazen, who had ridden a spirited mount at the head of the parade, shook hands with many of the veterans who stopped to speak, as did Senator William King, of Utah, and Nelson, who occupied front seats. Several dozen veterans sat down to rest in the reviewing stand and watch their comrades come in.

Edwin H. Lincoln, 90, of Pittsfield, Mass., with a set of whiskers like George Bernard Shaw's, drew storms of deserved applause as he slipped into the parade and planted a firm kiss on the cheek of a red-headed lady from Hollywood dressed in white, symbolizing Liberty. "First and only time I ever kissed the Statue of Liberty!" he cackled.

C. A. Sharp, a tiny veteran of hardly five feet, from New Jersey, finished in the best shape of any of the marchers. He was smoking a long stogey, waving and cutting a few skittish dance capers, and complaining the march had been "too darned slow—I want to get to the end for a glass of beer. Maybe I'll have two, seein' as it's kind of a big day!"

Later in the afternoon the veterans gathered for their first serious business session, one of the chief questions before them being whether to try to meet once again or to disband permanently. A majority of the old soldiers have favored dissolution as far as national encampments and parades are concerned, but under the fever of the day's excitement, they listened to an offer from the city of Milwaukee to gather there next year.

Election of officers is scheduled for this morning, when unfinished business also will be completed. C. H. William Ruhe, of Pittsburgh, and George H. Pounder, of Fort Atkinson, Wis., are the two candidates to succeed Nelson, who automatically retires.

A police count of the elements of the parade showed 355 G. A. R. veterans, with 185 in cars and 170 afoot.

of supplies, Clemenceau is on record that American supplies to the French armies were all that enabled them to hold the front. It is true that direct supplies of tanks, planes and ammunition did not get fully under way in our 18 months, but this was the policy and express desire of the allied powers.

"The French urged us, and we agreed, to use their 75 millimeter guns. The arrangement was that we would use facilities for manufacture in both France and England, furnishing them with steel and other elements. It worked out perfectly satisfactory to them. As for tanks, we furnished motors and other parts to be assembled abroad."

Up to March, 1918, Gen. Johnson said, "we were requested to confine our participation to furnishing of money and supplies and there was a distinct feeling among them that we should not attempt to organize and transport armies."

"But after the defeat of Byng's Fifth Army, they appealed to us in a panic to increase our shipments of men," Gen. Johnson said, "which we did in the swiftest and greatest mobilization of force by any nation or combination of nations in the war in a similar period of time."

Quoting Gen. Von Hindenburg and Von Ludendorf as having credited the United States with "turning what they regarded as a certain German victory into defeat," the American general said "perhaps their opinion is more important than Mr. Lloyd George's—they were on the business end of it."

Paris, Sept. 23 (AP).—Gen. John J. Pershing today declined to "make any comment whatsoever on Mr. Lloyd George's book."

the war; not a single American-made tank rolled into action.

The volume also carries on Lloyd-George's controversy with Field Marshal Haig whom the former premier indicts for "incompetency" in strategy and tactics and whom he charges with refusal to co-operate with the French Marshal Foch.

British army leaders, moreover, Lloyd-George subjects to the same type of denunciation as Pershing. He pays tribute to the American Navy as highly serviceable against submarines and in conveying transports.

American soldiers, he writes, were "superb," and their presence enabled France and Great Britain to fling their last reserves against Germany.

"Most of the fighting fell to the French and British troops," he says, "but their sacrifice would have been in vain without the American Army."

Lloyd-George's written criticism of Gen. Pershing will be published just a week after the statesman termed Chancellor Adolf Hitler of Germany "one of the greatest men I ever met."

Capital Transit Is Granted Plea For 1-Man Cars

P. U. C. Allows Company to Replace 20 and Adapt 20 Other Trolleys.

Federation of Citizens Associations and may be carried into court.

Supporting its verdict, reached after almost two months' study of evidence submitted at a public hearing in mid-July, the commission cited the financial conditon of the company and the need for economy in operation.

At the same time it emphasized the importance of modernizing present cars as a means of winning additional patronage.

"Testimony appertaining to the experience of transit companies in other cities," the order stated, "indicates generally that for speed, safety and comfort one-man cars and one-man operation are substantially equal to two-man cars and two-man car operation.

Only Slight Difference.

"The experience of the Capital Transit Co. in the District shows that one-man operated cars are at least as safe as two-man operated cars; that the comfort feature of the two types of cars are equal, and that, taking each of the two types of cars as a whole, the difference in speed is approximately 1 mile per hour in favor of two-man cars."

Adaptation of the President's Conference cars, as required in effect for the future, would offset this difference in speed, the commission pointed out.

"One-man street cars in the District are not novel," the order continued. "Such cars have been on the streets of Washington for more than 17 years."

Turning to the financial question, the commission said:

"The financial condition and income of the company is such as to warrant everyone charged with any responsibility for the operation and service to take stock.

"It is clear that if the company is to provide new equipment and other facilities, and give ample service to the public, every effort will be made to provide the means therefor.

"The greatest need of the company is better rolling stock, but there is also need for money to recondition track, construct and improve buildings, and to otherwise improve the plant and equipment.

"The amount of increased net revenue to be derived from a change to one-man operation would depend upon a number of elements, among the most important being the effects of wage differentials, employment of special personnel such as fare collectors and lessened speed unless the equipment is capable at least of the speed of two-man cars. Slower operation usually means lessened revenue per mile.

"Giving consideration to all the elements, there is no doubt that the net favorable figure could be materially increased by operation of modern equipment, whether by one man or two men, and by the additional passengers who would be attracted to the service by reason of newness, speed and comfort of the equipment."

Placing emphasis on the necessity for speed in operation, the commission stated that the President's conference cars are superior to all other types of street cars in operation in the District.

Stalled Elevator Imprisons Nine

Blum Reported Planning Move In Franc Crisis

Declared Concerned Over Flow of Gold, Rise of English Pound.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Sept. 23.—The increasing flow of gold out of the coffers of the Bank of France, and the rise of the English pound against the French franc led to reports tonight in political circles that Premier Leon Blum was considering a speedy "alignment" of French money.

Sir Frederick Leith Ross, economic adviser to the British government, talked with Blum and French Finance Minister Vincent Auriol last week, diplomatic sources said.

The conversations were said to have been part of the French government's efforts to obtain a promise from Great Britain not to devalue further the pound if the franc should be realigned with other currencies.

Blum, it was said, afterward conferred with Auriol, Economics Minister Charles Spinasse and M. Baumgartner, director of the movement of funds in the ministry of finance.

Spinasse was said to have reported on his talks with foreign financial experts at Geneva.

The cabinet meeting scheduled for Friday, informed persons said, would be concerned chiefly with a discussion of the French financial situation.

The breach between left and right wing factions widened tonight with an official report that smugglers had been intercepted bringing munitions into the country to arm a Fascistic league.

Clevenger Girl's Slayer Wins Stay

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 23 (AP).—The North Carolina Supreme Court today granted a writ of certiorari to Martin Moore, convicted colored slayer of Helen Clevenger, permitting him to bring his case before the court for review during the week of November 3, and automatically postponing his execution by gas, scheduled for October 2.

Moore, who confessed to slaying the blonde New York University coed at the Battery Park Hotel in Asheville, after the case had baffled police nearly five weeks, could have appealed only to the Governor for clemency had the court today denied his petition for the writ and granted a State motion to dismiss his appeal.

The writ permits Moore's attorneys to have a copy of the trial records prepared at Buncombe County, from which they will file exceptions and assignments of error with the supreme court before October 20. The court then will hear the plea for new trial for the hall boy during the first week of November.

Freshmen Hear Talk by Marvin As G. W. Opens

George Washington University is a "great, democratic institution, serving the youth of the Nation," President Cloyd H. Marvin told freshmen at the first assemblies yesterday as the university began its 116th academic year.

"You are partners in this enterprise," asserted Mr. Marvin. "The only reason for your being in college is that you may learn to work harder and to greater social purpose than you could by spending the next four years elsewhere.

"The university seeks to develop, through academic work, a moral fiber that will place you in a position to meet foursquare the problems that will confront you when you go out into the world."

The freshmen also were welcomed by Harry C. Davis, of the board of trustees; Dean William C. Johnstone, of the Junior College; Mrs. Vinnie G. Barrows, director of the Women's Personnel Guidance and Ross Pope, president of the Student Council.

At opening exercises of the School of Medicine, Dr. Marvin and Dean Earl B. McKinley welcomed the students. Dr. George B. Jenkins, professor of anatomy, delivered the annual faculty address.

He paid particular tribute to "the country doctor of some decades ago, the hero of many hard-fought battles who labored under difficulties and was always ready to go anywhere in any kind of weather."

Designer Speaks To Hecht Co. Club

With Frank Rosso, of the Worsted-Tex Co., original designer of the British Lounge V-8 Men's Suit, as the principal speaker, the first dinner meeting of the Hecht's Men's Wear Club was held in the Mayflower Hotel last night.

Rosso discussed the origin and production of the famous style of suit he designed, which first was popularized in England.

The practical side of the garment was explained by Irving Squires and Victor Riesenfeld. A fashion presentation of the suits was given by W. J. McCaw, Hecht buyer. Eight different builds of men were selected at random from the audience, and the fit of the garment tested in this manner.

Charles B. Dulcan, vice president of the Hecht Co., spoke on the importance of perfect co-ordination between the manufacturer and the retailer and the store and the customer. Short talks were given by Harold H. Levi, vice president, and Bert R. Sarazan, publicity and sales director.

Legion Selects New York City For '37 Session

Colmery Virtually Assured of Commander Post; Green, Hines Speak.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 23.—The American Legion, with whoops and shouts, voted today to make New York's Fifth avenue its 1937 parade grounds after listening to a sober warning against "foreign entanglements" from William Green, American Federation of Labor president.

A Kansas lawyer, Harry W. Colmery, of Topeka, virtually was assured of becoming the legion's next national commander as Quimby Melton, Griffin, Ga., editor and the sole opponent, conceded the Kansan's victory. Melton said he had already congratulated Colmery and promised him Georgia's support in tomorrow's election.

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York City, personally asked the World War veterans to bring their 1937 gathering to Gotham and were on the platform when legionnaires yelled approval.

The legionnaires greeted Green with enthusiasm as he shouted:

"We must not become involved in a foreign war in which we have no direct concern" and asked the veterans to stand side-by-side with labor in a drive for peace.

"The American Legion and the American Federation of Labor, standing together, will constitute a mighty force against any attempt which may be made to inveigle the United States into any of the controversies and war activities of European countries," Green said.

Green added that "a remedy for unemployment" must be found because 'America will always be safe if working men and women are guaranteed work and are accorded the opportunity to work and earn a decent living."

Gen. Frank T. Hines, Veterans Bureau administrator, asserted the paramount problem facing veterans was "the manner in which best may be met the necessities of peculiarly appealing cases of needy wives, mothers and children of veterans."

He urged the legionnaires to move slowly in demanding extensions and enlargement of benefits for former service men "to avoid the possibility of claims of injustice to that group of citizens not falling" within the veteran category.

Among resolutions adopted without dissent was one urging 90 per cent reductions in immigration quotas, deportation of all aliens who are anarchists, Communists or affiliated, directly or indirectly, with the Third Internationale.

Malformed Baby Dies in Hospital

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 23.—Julian Tafel, jr., 6-day old baby who underwent a delicate intestinal operation to save him from a "mercy death," died tonight in the Danish-American Hospital.

Alternately anxious and optimistic, the surgeons who corrected an intestinal malformation, which had threatened the infant with starvation, had expressed hope they could keep the tiny patient alive.

But the parents—Julian, sr., 24-year-old machanic who had insisted that "nature take its course," and Mrs. Eva Tafel, 22, who finally persuaded him to let Dr. Eastman and four assistants perform the operation yesterday—suffered the agonies of suspense anew following the operation.

A DISCOVERY GIVES YOU RUGS THAT SHEBA COULD NOT GET

(Karastan—The Finest of American Oriental Rugs)

RUGS that have all the beauty and coloring of the finest Oriental rugs are now made right here in America on power looms. It is doubtful that the Queen of Sheba could get as fine a rug at any price, in her day, as the American Orientals you can now buy so reasonably at Woodward & Lothrop.

These rugs are reproductions of some of the finest Orientals ever made. Many experts are unable to tell the difference in appearance. Better, by far, we believe, than any rugs the famous Queen of Sheba ever saw. For rug weaving did not reach its peak until the 16th and 17th centuries in Persia.

The intricate designs and superb colorings of handmade Orientals for years had defied mass reproduction. But because American inventive genius refused to admit defeat and kept working on the problem, one day a secret process was discovered which now enables us to reproduce these Oriental masterpieces, tuft for tuft, color for color. And immediately rugs, comparable to the finest Orientals, were put within the reach of millions of American homes.

Woodward & Lothrop at once secured these American Orientals—finer than anything of their kind on the market—and offers them to Washington at very much less than the customary prices of genuine handmade Orientals. Yet they have many of the same qualities that for centuries have made genuine Orientals prized beyond all other rugs. 9x12 Karastan rugs, $149.50. Other sizes, from the smallest, 2.2x4 at $14.95, to the largest, 9x18 at $263.75.

RUGS AND CARPETS, FIFTH FLOOR

How to Tell a Good American Oriental

WOODWARD & LOTHROP sells both true Orientals and their American-made counterparts. Whichever you choose for your home make sure you get the best, for in the long run it will cost you less.

Tufts Firmly Anchored

Most important in the life of a rug is the quality and quantity of material used. A slight increase in the cost of material (the labor will remain about the same) will greatly increase the life and enjoyment you get from a rug . . . sometimes as much as triple it. Here is a simple way to tell an American Oriental rug which has the necessary qualities to insure good value . . . qualities which are contained in the American Orientals offered by Woodward & Lothrop.

Look at the surface of the rug and see how silk-like and lustrous the pile is . . . how full of life . . . not dry and brittle. This is because only the fine grade of long-fibered, heavy, three-ply yarn has gone into its making.

Closely Woven

Rub your hand over the pile . . . feel how soft and silky it is. Now rub it briskly back and forth. Very little if any fluffing will occur because of the special blend of long-fibered worsted. Fluffing is caused by the short fibers working loose. All rugs shed somewhat when new but in the best of rugs this is reduced to a minimum.

High Pile

Turn the rug over and examine the back. Count the rows of tufts across and up and down. The more tufts to the square inch, the longer the life of the rug . . . the straighter the pile will stand . . . the more it will resist impressions left by heavy furniture.

Examine the back more closely. See how each tuft of colored yarn is pulled clear through to the back. This is the mark of a true Oriental contained in these American Orientals which are true reproductions.

Bend the rug double so that the tufts spring apart. Notice how long the three-ply pile is. This will make the rug softer to the tread . . . will enable it to stand up better . . . to spring back after each footfall . . . and to keep its luster and appearance after washing.

Beautiful Colors

And last, but not least, admire the delicate coloring . . . the infinite variety of shades which can now be achieved as well as on a power loom as by older, more expensive hand-weaving methods. And then you will know you are buying the best American Orientals . . . you will realize more than ever the truth behind the statement that "Quality is never an accident."

Goodrich Firm Closes Plant; 10,000 Jobless

By the Associated Press.

Akron, Ohio, Sept. 23.—Ten Thousand persons were thrown out of work today when the B. F. Goodrich Co. suspended production because of a series of departmental "sit-downs."

T. G. Graham, Goodrich vice president, met with representatives of the United Rubber Workers of America to discuss the situation.

He claimed less than 15 workers in the braided hose department staged a "sit-down" Monday that spread last night to union rubber workers in the tire department.

S. H. Dalrymple, international president of the Rubber Workers Union, agreed with Graham that a shutdown was "the orderly way to handle the situation."

The company issued a statement saying the controversy was not a lockout. Dalrymple responded with the statement it was not a tsrike.

Two Workers Stoned.

Minden, La., Sept. 23 (U.P.).—Two rail employes were stoned and a parcel post shipment reportedly was partially burned today as violence developed in the tri-State Louisiana & Arkansas Railway system strike.

Minneapolis, Sept. 23 (AP).—Gov. Hjalmar Peterson expressed hope today the strike of Minneapolis mill workers and wholesale grocery truck drivers could be settled without use of national guardsmen.

Approximately 400 of the troops were held in readiness at St. Paul and Minneapolis armories as the Governor issued his statement before conferring with strike leaders.

Meanwhile, union officials announced the Pillsbury "A" mill, one of the big flour concerns closed during the dispute, will be reopened Thursday. Conferences between union spokesmen and the management, they added, would begin at once on the subjects of wages and working conditions.

Fresh violence cropped out at the Hilltop Farm Feed Co. plant, one of the firms being picketed by the Flour, Feed, Cereal and Elevator Workers Union. About a dozen men rushed into the place and scuffled with workmen. The intruders were ejected before police arrived.

C. M. Jenkins Dies; Was Aid In War Bureau

The cheerful man who for the last 18 years made newsgathering at the War Department a pleasant and easy assignment for Washington reporters died yesterday in Garfield Hospital.

He was Courtney M. Jenkins, the 70-year-old former chief civilian assistant in the War Department press bureau. He lived at 12 Montgomery avenue, Takoma Park, Md. He retired last month and a few weeks later was taken ill.

There was sadness among newspapermen when Mr. Jenkins retired, for he had helped them out of difficulties, many times telephoning them when they had missed an important story. He was a past master at cutting red tape to get needed information speedily.

Mr. Jenkins was born in Kentucky. He became a traveling salesman when a young man. Some years before the World War he came to Washington, where he was a clerk for the George F. Oyster Co. When this country entered the war Mr. Jenkins entered the War Department as a civilian clerk. His ability to handle the press was discovered in 1920, when he was transferred to the press section. Four years later he was made chief clerk.

Jenkins is survived by his wife, Mrs. Faith Jenkins. Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. at Chambers funeral home Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Self-Portrait of Hans Holbein

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 23.—A piece of wood, about 4 inches in diameter and worth more than $100,000, rested in a wooden case on a filing cabinet in East Fifty-seventh street today, awaiting a customs official who will break the seal and examine it.

Nearly 400 years ago, in 1542 when he was 45, Han Holbein, the younger, the German painter who three years before had immortalized the features of Anne of Cleves for Henry VIII (whom she subsequently married), took up that piece of wood and painted his own face thereon.

The $100,000-or-more figure is only an approximation of the painting's worth, since this is the only known self-portrait of the artist on wood, and $100,000 is the price paid for it in 1929, before the depression.

Abris Silberman, its present owner, has not decided as yet what price will buy it.

There it lies, the picture of a pink-cheeked, bearded man of sturdy growth, capped and clear-eyed, the man who slaved away as court painter to Henry VIII for less money than a good butler gets today.

It arrived the other day on the Queen Mary, but news of the arrival, kept secret at the Silberman Galleries, had leaked out in advance from London, where, it was reported, an English museum had tried to corner the picture.

Dr. Paul Ganz, of Basle, Switzerland, world authority on Holbein, authenticated the painting, calling it the most excellent of its kind.

Burruss Named Virginia S. C. V. Leader Again

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 23 (AP).—N. Charter Burruss, of Norfolk, who was appointed two months ago as commander of the Virginia division, Sons of Confederate Veterans, to succeed Col. Gilbert Wood, of Roanoke, who was chosen commander of the Army of Northern Virginia department at the Shreveport convention, today was elected commander of the Sons for the ensuing year.

Brigade commanders chosen were: First, Brodie S. Herndon, Portsmouth; second, Joseph E. Laprade, Richmond; third, Col. R. Lampkin, Roanoke; fourth, Mary V. Pence, Charlottesville; fifth, Maj. Charles S. Roller, Fort Defiance.

Commander Burrus announced that he would appoint the following staff of officers: Adjutant and chief of staff, Col. George C. Cabell, of Norfolk; judge advocate, James H. Price, Richmond; historian, Douglas S. Freeman, Richmond; commissary, Frank C. Switzer, Harrisonburg; quartermaster, J. Edward Beale, Bealton; chaplain, Dr. W. Roy Mason, Charlottesville; inspectors, Mark V. Pence, of Charlottesville, and McHenry Peters, Lynchburg; publicity director, Dr. W. H. T. Squires, Norfolk; color sergeant, J. Z. Holladay, Charlottesville; assistant historian, F. B. Fitzpatrick, East Radford.

At the business meeting of the veterans, Gen. William McK. Evans, of Richmond, was re-elected commander for the ensuing year. Mrs. Daisy Lester Avery, of Richmond, again was named adjutant general and treasurer.

D. C. Driver Gets Traffic Sentence

Edward J. Smith, 348 H street southwest, was sentenced to a year in jail in Hyattsville Police Court yesterday on three charges growing out of an arrest for speeding a week ago.

Thomas C. Pitman, 2514 East place northwest, was fined $100 for driving under the influence of liquor and $25 for reckless driving.

William Burton, 1017 Twenty-second street northwest, was fined $100 for driving under the influence of liquor and $15 for driving without a proper permit.

Benjamin F. Lewis, 728 Second street southwest, was convicted of exceeding 60 miles an hour and ordered to pay a $100 fine.

Boy, 12, Victim of Hemophilia, 'Much Better,' May Cheat Death

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 23.—At the hospital today they said 12-year-old Albert Bocca, son of an unemployed truck driver, was "very much better."

On that cheerful announcement not only hung the happy ending of a drama of life and death, but discovery of a possible cure as well for hemophilia, the dread bleeding disease.

In the great Harkness pavillion of the Medical Center, doctors gave Alfonso, count of Covadonga, once heir to the throne of Spain, his thirteenth blood transfusion, and watched carefully, if with considerable professional restraint, the thrilling effort to save young Bocca.

But there was no such restraint at the bedside of young Bocca, in the Murray Hill Hospital. Albert, doomed to bleed to death, his case given up as hopeless in another hospital, the last rites of the church given him, was on the mend after injections of a chemical compound doctors have been working on here for 15 years.

"There's no mystery about it," said Dr J. C. Fisk, the doctor in charge, "we have been working with chemists for 15 years on a chemical combination that would replenish the blood with the elements necessary to combat hemophilia. We have had several good results. We believe we may even be able to treat mothers if we can reach them early enough to prevent their passing the disease on to their children."

But for all the strange elements that sometimes join in the making of real life drama, young Bocca probably would be dead today.

Yesterday his case was declared hopeless at St. Vincent's Hospital. Suffering with two other younger brothers in the Bocca brood of five living in a jobless tenement in the Ghetto, the youngster had reached the extreme condition where it was no longer possible even to give him blood transfusions.

The disease that scourged royalty as well as the poor had broken his veins down to the condition where the injection of a needle bearing new blood merely opened new wounds. He was bleeding internally, and suffering from peritonitis. He had had 18 transfusions.

He was sinking rapidly when Dr. Fisk, known as a specialist in treatment of the disease, was called.

Flood Waters Recede.

Austin, Tex., Sept. 23 (AP).—Flood waters of the Colorado River continued to recede today as the crest passed the State capital without causing serious damage.

Roosevelt Proclaims Oct. 12 Columbus Day

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of these grueling, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's special way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. Then poisons may start causing backaches, rheumatic pains, headaches, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

NEED A FORMULA FOR SENSIBLE LIVING

You will enjoy the "middle years" more if you watch your diet, exercise sensibly . . . and, if you drink, choose a form of whiskey that agrees with you

"Seagram's Crown Blended Whiskies are A MOST WHOLESOME FORM OF WHISKEY."

This conclusive verdict of our recent research is the answer of a group of trained, fact-finding men who for months investigated the question, "How does the human system respond to different forms of whiskey?"

As a guide to the sensible choice of whiskey, this plain statement has been invaluable to men who like fine whiskey and drink it in moderation.

It means that they have been able to be sure of getting, in Seagram's Crowns, not only fine-tasting whiskey, but a form of whiskey which is easy on most men, considerate, kind—and most likely to agree with them.

Say Seagram's and be Sure.

Seagram's Five Crown Blended Whiskey. The straight whiskies in this product are 5 years or more old, 25% straight whiskey, and 75% neutral spirits distilled from American grain. Bottled under this formula since May 1936.

Red Cross Call To Be Extended To Apartments

Plans Are Revealed for Campaign; Services Offered by 46.

Plans for soliciting Washington's thousands of apartment dwellers in the Red Cross roll call campaign, which opens Monday were revealed yesterday by Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, chairman of the house-to-house solicitation committee.

Every apartment building for which a volunteer campaign chairman can be obtained will be included in the drive, she said. So far 46 residents of as many apartment houses have offered their services.

Mrs. Graybon named Miss Elizabeth Wightman chairman of the committee which will devote itself exclusively to the Capital's "cliff dwellers." She is a veteran Red Cross worker, first in Pittsburgh and later in Washington. She urges all persons willing to volunteer as apartment house captains to call her at roll call headquarters, 1416 H street northwest, telephone National 3005.

Enrollment Blanks.

These captains, it was emphasized, will not have to make door to door solicitations. Instead, letters containing enrollment blanks will be sent to each apartment resident from headquarters, with a return envelope addressed to the building captain.

Douglas Griesemer, national director of roll call, will address a meeting of Red Cross volunteer solicitors in the Resettlement Administration at 4:30 p. m. today Winston B. Stephens will preside.

Janet Clapper, 12-year-old daughter of Raymond Clapper, Scripps-Howard columnist, spoke yesterday at a luncheon meeting of the Rotary Club as one of the 75,000 Junior Red Cross members in Washington. She will address the Cosmopolitan Club this afternoon.

Those who have volunteered for apartment house duty are:

The Westchester, Mrs. James E. Barnes; the LaSalle, Miss Phillips; Alban Towers, Mrs. R. W. Casey; 2852 Ontario road, Mrs. Frank R. Rutter; Tilden Gardens, Mrs. C. W. Huey Long Estate Is Set at $153,588

New Orleans, Sept. 23 (AP).—The late Senator Huey P. Long left an estate valued at $153,588.53, including insurance policies payable to his children, according to an inventory filed today in Civil District Court here by Charles J. Rivet, attorney for the estate.

Taunton, Mass., Sept. 23 (AP).—An administrator's inventory, disclosing the late Louis McHenry Howe, personal secretary of President Roosevelt, left personal property valued at $25,793.87, was entered in the registry of probate office here today.

The inventory disclosed the court had granted a widow's allowance of $5,000 to Mrs. Howe. The property will be distributed under the intestate laws of Massachusetts, as Howe left no will.

Truck Driver Is Freed In Local Trio's Death

Beaver, Pa., Sept. 23 (AP).—A jury today acquitted W. Mason McCulloch, Detroit truck driver, of a charge of involuntary manslaughter in connection with a truck-automobile collision in which three persons died.

Judge Frank E. Reader directed a verdict of acquittal for McCulloch's helper, Alfred E. Brain, also of Detroit.

TAKE WEIGHT OFF TIRED FEET

Lose Fat The Easy Way—Without Starvation Diets, or Back-Breaking, Banting and Rolling Exercises.

If your feet and ankles feel tired and ache all over—because you are carrying too much fat—do something about it. Try the treatment that has helped millions to reduce excess weight.

There's a reason why so many people find dieting slow and often times futile in reducing. The reason, doctors say, is often because a little gland is not working right.

All the blood in your body goes through this tiny gland sixteen times every day. If it doesn't pour into the blood stream about one and one-half drops of vital fluid every 24 hours, many people take on ugly fat. This fluid helps Nature to "burn up" excess food and fatty tissue in much the same way as a good "draft" acts in a furnace.

Now, physicians combat this condition by feeding this gland the substance it lacks — and millions of pounds of excess fat has been wiped out in this way.

Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on the same method used by doctors. So don't waste your time or money striving to reduce with starvation diets or back-breaking exercises. Start the Marmola treatment today that millions have used successfully to get rid of excess fat. The formula is in every box so you know just what you are taking. Don't wait—get a box of Marmola today from your druggist.

New Deal. In this world there can be no escape from the hard facts of arithmetic and experience.

"As prosperity under the pressure of natural economic forces gradually returns, the revenues of the Government luckily go up. But so still do the expenses of the Government. That is the most damning fact about the present Administration. The costs are traveling in the wrong direction. Unless they are reversed, we can never balance the budget or reduce taxes."

He concluded his message with an attack on the "narrow nationalism" of the New Deal.

"I do not believe this narrowness of outlook is good economics," he declared. "Nor does it make for social justice or higher standards of life. You women of America love your country and want it to go forward as America, free from foreign entanglement and true to its great past. Yet you care as deeply for peace.

"You are therefore against the narrow type of nationalism that would plan the economic forces and direct the lives of the people of this country. America cannot exist safely and self-contained without foreign trade or any responsibility abroad.

"I know that such narrow nationalism tends to convert the nations of the world into armed camps. The ideas of the present Administration are fair to listen to. But when the President turned his back on the London economic conference in 1933 he set back the cause of peace by many years. I am for that economic co-operation with other nations which will fully protect America's interests. I pledge practical support for the peaceful settlement of international disputes through arbitration and negotiation."

Former President Herbert Hoover advocated local administration of relief instead of Federal administration, declaring that during his administration when relief was handled locally "no one starved."

He charged that Federal administration of relief had led to greed, labor shortages in industry, a "numb dependency" of relief recipients and resentment, instead of sympathy, toward the unemployed.

Democratic Chairman James A. Farley and Republican Chairman John Hamilton addressed the forum, meeting for the first time since the campaign started. They sat side by side on the platform and chatted amiably before they spoke. Later each congratulated the other on his speech and they left together to pose for pictures.

Other speakers on the program included Norman Thomas, Socialist Presidential candidate; Earl Browder, Communist Presidential candidate; John W. Aiken, Socialist Labor Presidential candidate; D. Leigh Colvin, Prohibition Party Presidential nominee; William Lemke, Union Party Presidential nominee; Aubrey Williams, deputy Works Progress Administrator; Arthur A. Ballantine, Under Secretary of the Treasury in the Hoover Administration; Francis Marion Law, former president of the American Bankers Association; Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor; Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture; Charles P. Taft, lawyer and labor conciliator, and Theodore Christianson, Congressman and former Governor of Minnesota.

Benson Named To High Office By U.S. Bankers

Brooklynite, as Second Vice President, to Head Body in Two Years.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Sept. 23.—Philip A. Benson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was elected second vice president of the American Bankers Association today. The choice is virtually equivalent to placing Benson in the president's chair two years hence.

Other officers moved up a notch. Tom K. Smith, of St. Louis, became president, succeeding R. W. Fleming, of Washington, and Orval W. Adams, of Salt Lake, became first vice president, succeeding Smith.

Steady increases in home buying and building for the next several years were predicted today before the association's national bank division.

Constant Demand Noted.

"There is a constant demand for loans for the purchase or construction of homes, and there is every indication that this demand will assume steadily increasing proportions during the next several years," said Russell G. Smith, of San Francisco, cashier of the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association.

Smith's address followed one by Leroy A. Lincoln, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. president, who outlined huge costs for some proposed old-age pensions and warned against hasty legislation, and a declaration that banks were not taking their full place in economic and moral leadership.

The latter subject was discussed by Clarence Francis, of New York, president of General Goods Corporation, who suggested banks seek popular favor by financing national rebuilding and leading the way toward a higher living standard.

U. S. Aid to Continue.

"There is no question," Smith said, "but that the Federal Government will continue to encourage residential building in every way possible. This means a well-maintained demand for loans for the purchase or construction of homes in nearly every community in the country.

"This demand is and will continue to be a local demand and should be supplied by local funds."

Critics Assail Hull In Aiding of Sailor

New York, Sept. 23 (AP).—Gifford A. Cochran, speaking for the National Committee for Defense of Political Prisoners, today said he and his committee were not satisfied with Secretary of State Hull's denial that Lawrence Simpson, an American seaman to be tried in Berlin Monday on charges of treason and espionage, had not received adequate protection.

2 Groups Begin Study of U. S. Reorganization

Two of the three special committees set up by Congress and the Administration to study Government reorganization yesterday conferred for three hours on means of eliminating duplication in their own activities before they seek to blot out Government overlappings.

Members of the Senate reorganization committee, headed by Senator Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, and the President's "Committee on Administrative Management," headed by Louis D. Brownlow, met in Byrd's office at the Virginian's call.

It is understood Byrd wanted it established from the outset which fields the two groups should explore, and that there should be no conflict. At the close of the conference, Byrd announced progress had been "satisfactory," and that another conference will be held in two or three weeks.

The President's committee is expected to confine itself to questions of "management" and co-ordination of Federal operations from the White House down. Such management problems as personnel, finance and administration would be explored.

Senator Byrd wants his committee to be unimpeded in its study of reorganization possibilities, to the full extent of the powers it received from the Senate. He expects to lay specific reorganization proposals before the next Congress, to eliminate duplications of functions that have sprung up in the New Deal and in the old line departments. If the work cannot be completed in the next Congress, his committee's authority extends to future sessions.

A preliminary basis for co-operation and co-ordination of effort between the two groups was discussed yesterday.

Present at the conference besides Byrd and Brownlow were Luther H. Gulick, director of the Institute of Public Administration, New York; Dr. Charles E. Merriam, of Chicago University; William Tudor Gardiner, former Governor of Maine; John D. Clark, professor of economics at the University of Nebraska, and J. P. Harris, professor of political science at the University of Washington. Representing Brookings Institution were Fred W. Powell, in charge of Byrd's fact finding survey; Laurence F. Schmeckebeith, Lewis Merriam and Daniel T. Selko.

Edith Maxwell Verdict Called Judicial Error

Apoplexy Killed Father of Girl, Says Doctor, Aiding Defense.

The conviction of Edith Maxwell was a "miscarriage of justice," a Virginia physician asserted yesterday as he sent his contribution to The Washington Post's Edith Maxwell Defense Fund.

"Unless the skull bone was fractured, no blow on the head could cause death," he wrote.

Returning to Normalcy.

Meanwhile, life was good in the warm autumn sunlight of the out-of-doors for Edith yesterday.

Gradually she is returning to the normal ways of life, after her release Saturday on $6,000 bond. She faces a second trial in November on a charge of murdering her father more than a year ago.

The 22-year-old school teacher is spending her time at the home of relatives near Richmond, and with the aid of fresh air and home-cooked food, is gradually losing the palor she acquired during her many months in jail.

At her first trial she was sentenced to 25 years in the penitentiary, although her plea was that she struck her parent while he was beating her.

Contributions in Day.

Post readers continued to add to the fund yesterday. The money will be used in her second trial. Yesterday's contributions were:

The G. A. R. Moves On.

It was an intensely moving ceremony which Washingtonians were privileged to witness on Pennsylvania avenue yesterday. Up that historic thoroughfare, associated with so many stirring scenes in the national story, paraded the small and dwindling remnant of the great army that went forth to save the Union three-quarters of a century ago.

There was a merry spirit, as well as one of justified pride, in the faces of those old veterans as they tottered by in a last rendition of the victory march of 1865. Those who as boys had a share in America's most bitter war, and who as nonagenarians look back on victory and defeat in the no less gruelling battles which life brings to all, have every right to smile. The travail and the bitterness are behind them. They have played their role, and it must be pleasant to take the curtain call from a grateful people.

For onlookers, rather than for participants, the solemnity of the occasion was underlined. To all with any imagination these old men were turning back the pages of history, and doing that service for a generation all too inclined to live thoughtlessly in the present. The thin files of those whose memories look back to days before the Civil War are human reminders of the continuity of national existence. They represent the immortality of traditions which, like battle flags, are passed on to others as the individual standard bearer is struck down.

In a delicate combination of reverence for the past and idealism for the future lies the true secret of national greatness. That is what Lincoln had in mind when he said, of the comrades of these old men who fell in the flush of youth at Gettysburg, that "we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain!"

The same request is all these aged and failing veterans ask of a generation which soon will know them no longer: that we carry the torch as they, when they were young, were proud to carry it; that we see in the shadows closing around them only the lesson of regeneration which is implicit in every falling leaf.

Savings And Social Security.

Social security is too frequently regarded as a new objective in this country. That is because the term has been narrowed in its current application to the unemployment insurance, old-age pensions and similar risk-pooling systems now being put into effect by the Government. In a larger sense, however, social security has been developing under private auspices for many years.

Speaking at the American Bankers Association convention in San Francisco, Philip A. Benson, president of the association's savings division, pointed out that both life insurance and savings are a vital aspect of social security. During the last 34 years, he pointed out, savings depositors have increased from 6,000,000 to 42,000,000; the number of life insurance policies has grown from 17,500,000 to 124,000,000. Nevertheless, Mr. Benson regards unemployment insurance and old-age pensions as a logical and desirable supplement to this significant achievement.

Compulsory savings to tide over families and individuals in times of unemployment or old age become necessary when the benefits of bank deposits and life insurance do not reach down to the lower economic stratum. Insecurity has reached a point in this country where it is no longer desirable or possible to leave that group most in need of social safeguards to the uncertainties of charity. The Government has properly stepped in to supply this deficiency, but in doing so it merely systematized a thrift habit that was already well established in both the thinking and conduct of the American people.

This is one important reason why the new social security system has won such widespread approval. Mr. Benson, for example, recognizes the desirability of the social security act, while criticizing its reserve fund requirement and emphasizing the desirability of creating "one's own reserve" in the form of private savings. The significant point is that there is no competition or antagonism between the new movement and the plan of private savings. One supplements the other. And both, it cannot be too often emphasized, are likely to be worthless without the insurance to currency stability afforded by a balanced budget.

More Jobs And More Relief.

Impressive gains in employment have been reported recently from a number of sources. For seven consecutive months factory employment has increased. During the year ending with August, Department of Labor statistics show, approximately 960,000 men have gone back to work in all industries.

Further indications of better times for the workingman may be seen in the report of the United States Employment Service. Last month this agency found jobs in private industry for 128,353 individuals. In some cases these placements represent only transfers from one job to another, but for the most part they signify increasing industrial and business activity. To these data may be added also a recent report from the American Iron and Steel Institute showing that the number of men employed in the steel industry stands 10 per cent above the 1929 level.

In view of President Roosevelt's personal appeal for more jobs in private industry, contained in his special message to Congress last March, this achievement must be gratifying to the Administration. Few, if any, observers anticipated at that time that opportunities for work would open so rapidly. Whether or not private industry consciously accepted the challenge of the President, attainment of the objective he outlined is certainly well under way. That is cheering news for the entire country.

But the Administration has not carried out the pledge given private employers in the President's relief message to Congress. After emphasizing the responsibility of industry to re-absorb the unemployed, the President said:

> Insofar as their private employers' efforts are successful, the cost to the Federal Government of caring for the destitute unemployed will be lessened, and, if the employment gains are substantial enough, no additional appropriation by the next Congress for the fiscal year 1937 will be necessary.
> The ultimate cost of the Federal works program will thus be determined by private enterprise . . . Only if industry fails to reduce substantially the number of those now out of work will another appropriation and further plans and policies be necessary.

Despite that very positive declaration and the notable reduction of unemployment every month since it was made, the work relief program is being steadily expanded. It is true that all of the gains in WPA activity may be explained by conditions resulting from the drought. But when these are eliminated from the picture, the WPA shows virtually no progress toward demobilization in areas where there has been no drought. In spite of the remarkable pick-up in private industry, the Administration continues to spend enormous sums for work-relief as if no change in economic conditions had taken place.

Whether or not this is another manifestation of politics in the relief program, it creates a most unfortunate impression. From all parts of the country have come complaints that workers cannot be obtained because the WPA is continuing its full program of made work in a period of industrial revival and a busy harvest season. This sort of competition with private industry, coupled with the continuation of enormous outlays that might well be tapering off, is not calculated to strengthen the confidence of business and thus encourage further progress in the creation of real jobs.

It is time for the Administration to uphold its own end of the President's plan to reduce unemployment.

A Plea For Independence.

Nazi ideology has been applied to so many other forms of activity in the Third Reich that it would have been surprising indeed had science been omitted from the category of things to be regimented.

Nor has it been omitted. The heavy hand of the brown-shirt bureaucrat has been felt in the universities, the laboratories and the research agencies. Not only have German scientists had to comply with Germany's "grandfather clause" before they could be qualified as 100 per cent Aryan scholars, the Nazis have also sought to fit science into the Procrustean bed of their own fantastic theories regarding blood, race, soil, Germanism, etc.

Thus far German scientists, with a few notable exceptions, have taken all this lying down. But signs are visible which indicate that the erudite worm is turning. Recently, for instance, Dr. Ferdinand Sauerbruch, noted German surgeon, made a speech before a congress of German medical men in which he definitely warned the Nazis to keep their dogmas out of science.

"Science," he said, "does not need any scrubbing by outsiders. Science must remain true to itself. Science will fulfill what is demanded of it (the execution of the Fuehrer's four-year plan) on condition that it retain its freedom and independence in its work. In spite of all necessary limitations, liberty remains an essential characteristic of science, and spiritual and intellectual freedom remain an essential characteristic of science. Every scientist desires to serve his nation. His work, however, cannot be complete if it is merely a service to the nation."

Dr. Sauerbruch's eminence, plus his professions of loyalty to the Fuehrer, will probably save him from a concentration camp. But he is preaching dangerous doctrine. If the Nazis leave science alone there is no assurance that the scientists, exercising the intellectual freedom they demand, will let the Nazis alone. They might, for instance, examine dispassionately various Hitlerite theories and find, as anthropologists everywhere else in the world have found, that they are pure moonshine. Can the Nazis afford to be so generous?

A Way Out For France?

For five years, a period in which one nation after another has abandoned the gold standard, France has kept up an unceasing struggle to hold the franc at par.

Whether or not wise from the long-range point of view, that struggle has left deep scars on France's economic and financial situation. The disparity between France's own high price level and the lower price level (in gold terms) obtaining in countries that have devalued their currencies, has played havoc with the French export industries and tourist trade. The blow might have been mitigated had successive French governments been able to carry out a thoroughgoing deflation of prices. But efforts in that direction met with such great obstacles that the results were disappointing. And now, partly in consequence of the wage-raising and work-creation efforts of the Blum regime, the cost of living in France is again on the rise.

It is questionable, therefore, whether the French fight against devaluation can be continued much longer. Indeed were it not for the dangerous political consequences of letting the franc go the way of the pound and the dollar, France by now might have devaluated as Paul Reynaud and other French politicians have been urging for some time.

With the bitter memory of prior devaluation still vividly in mind, the French people have overwhelmingly opposed the abandonment of the gold standard. It would be suicide for any governments to advocate it, let alone put it into effect. And there is something to be said for this point of view. But at least so far as the tourist trade and export industries are concerned, devaluation of the franc might remove a serious disadvantage under which the French now operate.

However, the question of devaluation is no longer one of comparative advantages. The real problem which faces the French government today is whether devaluation will be a voluntary act, carried out, perhaps, in agreement with Great Britain and the United States, or will be forced on the government through the compulsion of events.

If it is voluntary, there is a possibility that it might lead to an international agreement for the stabilization of currencies. The usefulness of such an agreement cannot be doubted. On the other hand, if devaluation is forced on the French nation serious political consequences might result.

Undoubtedly the French would prefer to stay on gold if that is at all possible and if they cannot make devaluation a step in the direction of international monetary stability. France is still in the depths of a business depression; the deficit is mounting; the efforts of the government to finance itself by a flotation of "baby bonds" have had only disappointing results, and tax returns are falling off. All these factors have brought the question of devaluation very much to the fore.

Under the circumstances the report of the financial committee of the League of Nations may offer the harassed Blum government a way out. That report contains a veiled recommendation that gold bloc countries should devaluate their currencies in order to revive international trade by closing the "abnormal gaps" separating price levels in different countries. Should this report meet with a sympathetic response in London and Washington the bitter pill of devaluation might be disguised by the sugar coating of international currency stabilization and thus made more palatable to the French public and less dangerous to the government at Paris.

Civic Theater Plans.

Announcement of plans to establish a civic theater here is welcome news. Washington has now only one legitimate stage. This, for a city with so many drama devotees, plainly leaves room for more. In past seasons, of course, there have been scattering amateur attempts to add to the theatrical fare but these, in the main, have failed to retain the public's fancy. The new plan is to pool the talents and energy of these groups in one single effort. To persons skeptical of such self-created organizations, the success of the National Symphony Orchestra, itself organized by its players, may be recalled.

A director with an established reputation, together with competent assistants, has been obtained to direct the new theater. His background and experience suggest a leadership of both inspiration and confidence for the local enterprise. This is not to intimate that the new theater will necessarily have plain sailing. There is many a slip between organization campaign and curtain call. But at least the venture faces a better than even chance, not the less so because Washington, though the Nation's Capital, is today inadequately served in polished stage entertainment.

"Borrowing money is the same as borrowing trouble," says an economist. Oh, no, it isn't. You can still borrow trouble.

Curtain Call.

In Review—Then And Now.

In "Four Years of Fighting," published just 70 years ago, Charles Carleton Coffin, the famous Northern war correspondent, described as follows the review in Washington which preceded the opening of the final drive on Richmond.

On the 25th of April (1864) the Ninth Corps passed through Washington and moved into Virginia. It was a sublime spectacle.

The Ninth Corps achieved almost the first successes of the war in North Carolina. It had hastened to the Potomac in time to aid in rescuing the Capital when Lee made his first Northern invasion. It won glory at South Mountain, and made the narrow bridge of Antietam forever historic. It had reached Kentucky in season to aid in driving the Rebels from that State, and now, with recruited ranks—with new regiments of as good blood as ever was poured out in the cause of right, with a new element which was to make for itself a name never again to be despised, the corps was marching through the Capital of the Nation, passing in review before Abraham Lincoln.

* * * *

The corps marched down Fourteenth street past Willard's Hotel, where upon the balcony stood the President and Gen. Burnside. Behold the scene! Platoons, companies, battalions, regiments, brigades and divisions. The men are bronzed by the rays of a Southern sun and by the March winds. The bright sunshine gleams from their bayonets; above them wave their standards, tattered by the winds, torn by cannon ball and rifle shot—stained with the blood of dying heroes. They are priceless treasures, more beloved than houses, land, riches, honor, ease, comfort, wife or children. Ask them what is most dear of all earthly things; there will be but one answer—"the flag! the dear old flag!" It is their pillar of fire by night, of cloud by day—the symbol of everything worth living for, worth dying for!

Their banners bear the names of Bull Run, Balls Bluff, Roanoke, Newbern, Gaines' Mills, Mechanicsville, Seven Pines, Savage Station, Glendale, Malvern, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Antietam, South Mountain, Knoxville, Vicksburg, Port Hudson, Gettysburg inscribed in golden characters.

The people of Washington have turned out to see them. Senators have left their chamber, and the House of Representatives has taken a recess to gaze upon the defenders of their country as they pass through the city—many of them, alas! never to return.

* * * *

There is the steady tramping of the thousands—the deep, heavy jar of the gun carriages—the clattering of hoofs, the clanking of sabers, the drum-beat, the bugle-call and the music of the bands. Pavement, sidewalk, windows and roofs are occupied by the people. A division of veterans pass, saluting the President and their commander with cheers.

And now with full ranks, platoons extending from sidewalk to sidewalk, are brigades which never have been in battle, for the first time shouldering arms for their country; who till a year ago never had a country, who even now are not American citizens, who are disfranchised—yet they are going out to fight for the flag! Their country was given them by the tall, pale, benevolent-hearted man standing upon the balcony. For the first time they behold their benefactor. They are darker hued than their veteran comrades; but they can cheer as lustily, "Hurrah! Hurrah!" "Hurrah for Massa Linkum!" "Three cheers for the President!" They swing their caps, clap their hands and shout their joy.

Long, loud and jubilant are the rejoicings of those redeemed sons of Africa. Regiment after regiment of stalwart men—slaves once, but freemen now—with steady step and even rank, pass down the street, moving on to the Old Dominion.

It was the first review of colored troops by the President. He gave them freedom; he recognized them as soldiers.

"No"—Sweetly Spoken.

When Lao-Tse in the sixth century B. C. was poetically elaborating his philosophies to learned contemporaries, the gentle art of polite refusal was even then old. For centuries, we suspect, the Chinese children had been learning the gentle art of saying "no" at the knees of their tutors or in the women's halls.

The practice must still be one in which the Chinese excel, if we can credit the report of a Western paper that one would-be author received this rejection slip from a Chinese publishing house:

We have read your manuscript with boundless delight. By the sacred ashes of our ancestors, we swear we never dipped into a book of such overwhelming mystery. If we were to publish this book it would be impossible in the future to issue any book of lower standard. As it is unthinkable that within the next 10,000 years we shall find its equal, we are, to our great regret, compelled to return this too divine work and beg you a thousand times to forgive our action.

If rejection slips of this sort were common, it is quite possible that book lists would be greatly shortened. Authors would be tempted to write for rejection rather than for publication: certainly few writers could resist the opportunity to listen to such words of wisdom concerning their own works.

Roosevelt Vs. Communism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your columnist, Franklyn Waltman, writing in The Post on September 21, attempts to divorce Gov. Landon from any connection with the "economic royalists" by likening the situation unto President Roosevelt's alleged connection with the Communists. He absolves both candidates from any alliance with these groups.

First of all let us consider here what communism is. To my mind communism is an extreme reaction to an extreme set of circumstances. In other words, when the laboring class of people are suppressed and deprived of decent living wages, the inevitable result is a violent response. Communism does not breed in a nation where people receive a good living wage for their labor and where farmers are able to make a fair profit on the sale of their products.

The President's success in attaining these objectives has had the wholesale effect of arresting communistic movements in this country. He realizes that a capitalistic system must endure, but that it must not be allowed to become a menace to society in general. Instead, certain adaptations, such as shortened working hours, must ensue in the face of changed economic conditions.

What Mr. Roosevelt proposes to do with respect to bringing about the last mentioned objective I am not in a position to say. However, I am certain of one thing, and that is he is not going to deny the existence of this and other problems of like importance and will use every resource to find a logical solution. He will not sit idly by and indulge in hope when stern reality points the way for action. He is a man of deeds, not merely a man of words.

FRANK R. COLEMAN.
Arlington, Va., Sept. 22.

Presidential Qualities.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I absolutely agree with H. L. Halsey in The Post of September 17, when he writes: "Our Presidents and Presidential candidates have been men of outstanding personalities." And I want to emphasize the past tense, namely that they "have been."

Of course, an "outstanding personality" or the greatest crooner on the radio does not necessarily make a great President, any more than the proverbial swallow makes a summer. Neither does "great culture" or "high learning," in spite of Mr. Halsey's opinion.

A great President must be more than a mere pleasing politician and great radio crooner. He must have some statesmanship qualities, that recognizes there is a belt line of decency, when playing the political game. Playing politics with the national indebtedness, the country's business, the people's money, race, religion and even class, in trying to corral group votes and make his party the majority party is no justification for and a reason why Roosevelt should not be elected.

P. H. JAMES.
Washington, Sept. 17.

Aims Of The N. A. F. E.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I would like to congratulate you on your editorial in The Post of September 18 in re the A. F. G. E. and which you titled "Divided We Fall." And also for the cartoon of my favorite cartoonist, Elderman.

Nevertheless I feel that you are wrong in this particular matter, at least insofar as our newly organized National Association of Federal Employes is concerned.

You have been mighty fair in your discussion of this matter. When other papers have accepted stories written by paid publicity men who were instructed to attempt to convince the public that the non-civil service bureaus were infested with reds, The Post did, through its news columns, ridicule this idea. We of the non-civil service groups appreciate this fairness.

However, to get back to the point of this letter, I would like to say that the National Association of Federal Employes is very necessary because the aims and needs of the non-civil service employes is as far removed from the aims and needs of the civil service employes as the moon is from the earth. Those who have civil service status are interested in 30-year retirement and other matters of that sort. But what good would it do us of the non-civil service groups to fight for, or help to pay for a fight for, 30-year retirement, when we have no retirement at all.

It is my firm belief that the only solution of this present situation is for all non-civil service employes to join the National Association of Federal Employes. I believe that we of the N. A. F. E. can work in complete accord with the A. F. G. E. in carrying out aims which are beneficial to all, provided, of course, that the A. F. G. E. rid itself of its "Little Napoleons" who assisted not at all in the formation of that union but have, since it got in the money, collected its pound of flesh every year and dragged the union (in the formation of which some of us made considerable sacrifice) to the point where it is doubtful whether it will survive.

JOHN ARTHUR SHAW.
Temporary President, National Association of Federal Employes.
Washington, Sept. 18.

Too Many Executives?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In this day of agitation and controversy over most everything, including education, let me ask, as I have just heard an educator say "there is too much education," if that is not so. Ask if you will, as the writer has done in half a dozen States, what becomes of the growing men who have attended agricultural colleges, ask how many of them ever return to the farms. Inquire in the cities how many finished artisans or mechanics there are, men, who are not merely hatchet and saw carpenters, hammer and monkey wrench machinists, mere jack-legs. Are not too many of our youth seeking white collar jobs?

Why are there not more self-respecting honest-to-goodness, clean, decent, dress-up-in-the-evenings, go-to-church-on-Sunday mechanics, like the "village blacksmith" that used to be in our readers. This writer always loved that old man, for he realized that his own father was like him "for he feared not any man."

Think if you will, haven't we too many lawyers and cab drivers, floor-walkers, and too many executives?

Henry Ford is right in endowing an industrial school. If there were industrial schools training boys and girls too, in a trade (or vocation), if you please, making something that they could really be interested in, trying to excel, knowing that they were really producers, making something that would perhaps outlast them and their generation, why not encourage them and give them the opportunity. Yes! Through that "New Deal" if no other way can be found. COMMENTATOR.
Alexandria, Va., Sept. 21.

Sherman Was Right About War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The undersigned, a son of a "loyal" father, as well as the bearer of the full name of an uncle who enlisted in the Ohio Volunteers, and marched into Dixie to the strains of "We'll Hang Jeff Davis on a Sour Apple Tree," requests the privilege of making some observations anent the question raised by Mrs. Mary Logan Tucker, which appeared in your paper of September 11.

Mrs. Tucker appears greatly incensed over a passage which appears in Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind," which reads as follows: "Gen. Grant was a butcher who did not care how many men he slaughtered."

While this writer does not know the author of that book, he feels justified in bringing to the attention of Mrs. Tucker, as well as those who share her convictions about "Southern women writers who cannot resist trying to defame the reputation of Gen. Grant," some observations that neither admit of misconception nor doubtful construction.

In the great treasury of unquestionable historic truths, "The Official Records of the Rebellion," Vol. XLIII, Part 1, Page 917, we have Gen. Grant's order to Gen. Sheridan, of August 26, 1864, which reads as follows: "Do all the damage to the railroads and crops you can. Carry off stock of all descriptions and negroes, so as to prevent further planting. If the war is to last another year, we want the Shenandoah Valley to remain a desert waste."

And the same official records, Vol. XXXVII, Part II, pages 300 and 301, give a telegram of Gen. Grant to Gen. Halleck, which reads: "If the enemy has left Maryland, as I suppose he has, he should have on his heels veterans, militiamen, men on horse-back, and everything that can be got to follow to eat out Virginia clean as they go, so that crows flying over will have to carry their provender with them."

Who is this "enemy?" Was it not of the ilk that took an active part in the extension of our natural boundary from "a mere fringe along the Atlantic to the Golden Gate?" If not, why did Gen. Scott, in his explanation of the perplexities which confronted him before Richmond, say: "The very men that took me into Mexico City are keeping me out of Richmond?"

The effectiveness with which Gen. Grant's orders were executed, by Gen. Sheridan, can be best expressed in the language of "The Dashing" Sheridan, himself, and reads as follows: "I have burned 2,000 barns, filled with wheat and corn, all mills in the whole country, destroyed all factories of cloth, killed or driven off every animal, even the poultry that could contribute to human sustenance. Nothing should be left in the Shenandoah but eyes to lament the war."

With their bridges dynamited or burned under the demands of military necessity, their mills put to the torch, their factories in ruins, their barns—and in many instances, their homes—in ashes, their food carried off or destroyed, without any means of transportation, the thousands of non-combatants—many of whom were too young, too old or too weak to walk—the residents of the Shenandoah Valley were, indeed, in a pitiable condition. The darkest annals of the human race, all things considered, do not furnish a parallel to the armed conflict that took place in the U. S. A. between 1861 and 1865!

After the execution of Grant's order, a general massacre would have been in the interest of human suffering. Oh, what an abuse of words to refer to that conflict as a "Civil War," and the invading army as "The Grand Army of the Republic!"

Is there any wonder that the descendants of some of the leaders of that period shudder, today, when they think of that inexorable law of God which says, "The iniquities of the fathers shall be visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation?"

Virginians of today should rejoice to have testimony of the patriotic heroism of their ancestors that could be only thus conquered. The further we get from the Hell-raising activities of the leaders of that period, and their financially-interested beneficiaries, the less we will hear of the "gentle, kind-hearted" attributes of an administration under which the very apex of atrocity was reached.

Man Of Sport.

Reports are to hand of a mighty man of sport who would seem to combine the fabulous prowess of Paul Bunyan, John Henry and Popeye the Sailor with the remarkable social knacks of Ivan Petrovsky Skovar, the Muscovite hero of the old college doggerel who could imitate Irving, tell fortunes with cards and sing to a Spanish guitar.

This man's name is given as Johnny Montague, and his field of operations is Hollywood, but it seems unlikely that our story is a publicity plant, for he avoids publicity and will not permit anyone to take his picture if he can prevent it. Grantland Rice, the greatest American authority on athletes, has played golf with Montague many times and declares that his equal as a shot maker never lived.

A man who often has seen Montague in action at the Lakside Club, in Los Angeles, reports that his drives will average from 40 to 60 yards longer than Bobby Jones' and will almost equal those of Jimmy Thomson, the pro, whose specialty is distance off the tee. That would be nigh on to 350 or 360 yards. Yet, although Montague has lived in Hollywood several years, an inquirer who made an investigation on the ground says—"Nobody knows where he came from. He refuses to play tournaments in which his prowess would attract publicity. He is about 30 years old, 5 feet 10, weighs about 210 pounds and could throw Jim Londos out of the ring."

• • •

This part of our report is received from a man who is an authority on athletes and gazed on the mysterious prodigy with the eye of an expert.

There was a fellow in our office the other day telling about this Montague, and on the strength of his report we sent a wire to the Coast asking for details. The reply was, in part, as follows:—

"This Montague yarn has me licked. It's the most amazing story I ever bumped into. I've phoned and interviewed dozens of peole. I went to the Lakeside Club, and the net result is confirmation of the incredible tales which you heard in New York.

"Scotty Chisholm, the dean of golf writers on the Coast, knows Montague as well as the next one, but hardly knows him at all. One report says he is a member of a prominent Boston family. A photographer took three shots of him one day, but Montague flatly refused to let him print the pictures. He is such a formidable guy that the photographers are afraid to sneak shots of him. He has a chest like an apple barrel, but doesn't carry an ounce of fat. In a fight he is said to have picked up a 250-pounder and thrown him over the bar.

"The only tournament he ever played was the Lakeside Club championship of 1935, which he won easily. It is reported that with a driver he can hit thrown golf balls as in batting practice in baseball, but his golf style is orthodox. He refuses to enter driving contests, but played Gene Sarazen once and lost with a 70 to Gene's 69. However, Montague already had played 18 holes. He beat Olin Dutra with either a 64 or a 65 to Dutra's 67, and he has played all but two holes at Lakeside, a long golf course, using only a driver and niblick to reach the greens.

"I confirmed the story of his bet with Bing Crosby. Montague bet Crosby he could beat him with a ball bat, a shovel and a rake. They played one hole for $40. Montague hit two fungoes, landing in a trap near the green, shoveled out and went down with one putt from his rake. Crosby took a five with his golf clubs and paid off.

"He can take a dozen balls and bet $100 on each one that he can land within 10 feet of the pin from any distance up to 200 yards and collect most of his bets. He bet a fellow he could drive from the first tee at Lakeside across Dark Canyon road in five shots. This is about three-quarters of a mile. He did it, with distance to spare.

• • •

"He is a whale of a man at cards—no magician, mind you, but an expert at cards, as in athletics. I hear he can flip a card and make it stick in the crack of a door at 5 feet, but I can't verify that. The caddies at Lakeside won't talk about him, even for money.

"For a couple of years he has lived with Dave Hardy, the movie comedian, but now and again he will disappear for a few months, and they say he goes out into the desert somewhere. At trick shots he is the only man who ever excelled Joe Kirkwood, the Australian wizard."

I have been unable to take the readers of these pieces entirely into my confidence regarding the authorities for the foregoing mixture of information, opinion and report. Several men are represented, but none of them is willing to be quoted.

They are prominent and reliable.

"Can he make toast?" I asked one of the men who have peered at the fabulous Mr. Montague in person.

"Can he make toast!" my friend exclaimed. "Give him an egg and he will churn you up the best fried chicken you ever tasted in your life."

Bay State Vote

By Earl G. Latham.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Boston.

AFTER ONE of the biggest primary registrations in years, Massachusetts voters indicated on September 15 that they are in the mood for a house cleaning of State politics. The most significant aspect of the elections is the increasing likelihood that Gov. James M. Curley will be retired to private life in November. Generally speaking, the Democratic campaign provided the hottet battles, while the Republican campaign produced the greater amount of votes. Now that the stage has been cleared of the supernumerariles, it is easier to determine how the chief actors stand in relation to each other and to their chances in the November election.

A distinct surprise was the demonstration of vote-getting powers by the Republican candidate for the United States Senate, Henry Cabot Lodge, jr. Before the pre-primary convention's endorsement of Lodge, there was some opinion in Republican councils that stronger candidates for the office were available. It was feared that Lodge's youth and comparative inexperience would make it possible for James the First to refer to him contemptuously as "the boy from the North Shore" for one of Mr. Curley's best attitudes is an upstage manner and innocent amazement towards the candidacies of his opponents.

Mr. Lodge, however, ran well ahead of his entire ticket with 354,000 votes. This figure represents an excess of about 107,000 votes over the support given Curley in the Democratic primary. The importance of these figures is enhanced by the fact that there were few contests in the Republican camp, and that, therefore no special effort was made to get out the vote in the primaries.

ON THE BASIS of the number of contests in the Democratic lists, predictions were freely made before the elections, that the ballots cast in that primary would far outnumber the ballots cast in the Republication primaries. For all candidates for the office of United States Senator, however, there were 420,000 Republican votes and only 368,000 Democratic votes. The inescapable conclusion is that the electorate means to put an end to Curley's office holding, for a while at least.

Lodge's chief opposition came from Alonzo B. Cook, a nominal Republican and an appointee of the Governor's to the State income tax division, and a former State auditor. It has been unkindly hinted that Cook's independent candidacy is not a sincere one but merely intended to split the vote for Lodge. If so, he did not split the vote very appreciably for he polled only 42,000. As a result of the returns, it would appear that the Governor has more to fear from defections within his own party than Lodge has in the opposition of Cook.

The figures in the Democratic primary tell an interesting story. Curley, of course, won the nomination for the United States Senate by amassing 247,000 votes. His nearest opponent was mayor of Fitchburg, Robert Greenwood, who polled 104,000 votes while Thomas O'Brien, the Union Party candidate, received 37,000.

Curley's Boston vote was about 90,000, while Greenwood received 35,000 and O'Brien 13,000. Curley's Boston vote was about 36 per cent of his total support. Greenwood's 35 per cent, and O'Brien's, 35 per cent. That is to say, the protest against Curley as reflected in the votes received by his opponents, is not confined to one locality but is distributed proportionately between Boston and the rest of the State. The distribution of this vote gives support to the notion that it actually represents a protest against Curley and is not merely a complimentary vote by a particular locality for a favorite son.

Vote for O'Brien Declared Misleading.

THOMAS O'BRIEN'S low score is misleading, for he is probably much stronger than the returns would indicate. Mr. O'Brien did not intend to make a campaign for the senatorial nomination until about 10 days before the primary. Because of that, his name was not on the primary ballot. In the short space of time he allowed himself, he tried to organize a sticker campaign. But here also, grave difficulties were encountered. The stickers were available in a few of the cities and scarcely at all elsewhere.

Furthermore, although O'Brien urged those who had no stickers to write in his name, many failed to put a cross beside the name after it was written in, making the ballot void so far as the vote for O'Brien was concerned. Then, to increase the confusion, because of ignorance of the law or otherwise, some of the polls officials refused to allow the distribution of stickers near the polls. There is little doubt that, but for these obstacles, the vote for O'Brien would have been larger than it was.

One thing, at least, seems to have been settled by the vote accorded O'Brien. This is, the source of the support which he may expect. If the primary returns are a good indication, it seems that the Union Party may expect to draw more from the Democrats than from the Republicans. Although O'Brien's vote amounted to 37,000 in the Democratic primary, he received only 6,000 votes in the Republican primary. This ratio of six Democratic votes to one Republican vote is a little in excess of most of the predictions made in this matter.

On the other hand, it cannot be said that the returns accorded to candidates of the Union Party justify the exaggerated claims of support in Massachusetts made by Lemke and Coughlin. Although the O'Brien candidacy is perhaps not a fair sample of the strength upon which the party can rely, because of the absence of a place on the ballot, the results of local candidates do not indicate that Coughlin has a third major party in the making. Apparently in a year when so much is at stake, voters are not inclined to back futile candidacies.

Party Foes Put Curley In Precarious Position.

ALTHOUGH the Governor has pooh-poohed the opposition which has risen against him, he finds himself now in a precarious situation. The fact remains that if Curley had the votes which were cast for his opponents in the Democratic primary he would now be better off by 100,000 or more votes than he actually is. This support would put him in a position of competitive equality with Lodge, an advantage which he will need if he is not to be swamped in November.

But no one expects that the margin of difference between Curley and Lodge in November will be as much as 100,000 votes. The fact that Curley is the primary nominee will draw to his support some of the regulars who, although ready to fight bitterly in a family row, would never think of deserting in the face of the enemy. Moreover, there is a chance that neither Mr. O'Brien nor Mr. Greenwood will get their names on the November ballot, for the chairman of the State Democratic committee has asked the State Ballot Law Commission to scrutinize the nomination papers filed, with a view towards "simplifying" the ballot for the voters. If the independent candidacies were eliminated in this fashion, the advantage would accrue to Mr. Curley not a little, and to Mr. Lodge, not at all.

The chief issue in the campaign was Curleyism, as indeed it was bound to be since the major struggle was the Democratic nomination to the United States Senate. The New Deal figured very little in the result. It is likely, however, that the national Democratic campaign will suffer as a result of the primary election. Although he has had little encouragement to do so, Curley has hitched his wagon to Roosevelt's star. Were his chances better than those of the President, it is likely that he would have freed himself of an encumbrance to his own fortunes. As it is, he will probably make the most of the fact that they both bear the same party label. This does not augur well for Roosevelt.

One thing is certain and that is that Curley will not be able to conduct the same kind of campaign against Lodge that he conducted against Greenwood. For while the latter belabored and stung the Governor as he might, the latter simply registered distain in his best Barrymore imitation and talked about the "larger issues." These consisted chiefly in unctuous and pious references to the reforms which he had brought about in the State, with, now and then, a kind word for Roosevelt. Experience has shown that any candidate whose sole platform is his antagonism towards Curley is already two-thirds defeated, for that gentleman invariably represents exposure as abuse, and something more than abuse is necessary to alienate the affections of the large number of die-hard Curleycrats in Boston.

Canute failed to stop the tide. Mr. Curley is about to experience the same difficulty.

Sucker Stew

Cooking Up A Red Scare.

To make a Rabbit Stew, says an old cook book, first catch your rabbit. A Red Scare can be cooked up with even less difficulty. Real Reds are extremely easy to catch. For they do not flee the hunter's gun or the trapper's net. They do not seek cover when the hunt is on. On the contrary they actually come out to meet it—and with enthusiasm. It gives them no pleasure at all to keep their lights hidden under a bushel. They are in misery only when they are ignored.

But where the chase is too easy the quarry is not worth going after. There is thus no real sport to be derived merely from hunting Reds that are Reds. That is why so many Red Scares have proved such insipid concoctions, arousing nothing but indifference among the masses of the people for whom they have been intended. And that is why it has been found necessary to change the recipe.

In the revised version of "How to Cook Up a Red Scare," the real Reds no longer constitute the indispensable ingredient, like rabbit in a rabbit stew or clams in a clam broth. Indeed they now serve merely as the spice to give the needed flavor to the concoction. The pot is filled with quite different game.

But as before the prelude to a Red Scare must be a Red hunt. Only its resemblance is now not to fox-hunting, where the fox runs away from the hounds, but rather to a treasure hunt where the clews are carefully concealed to await discovery at the effective moment. And to make the chase all the more exciting those not in the know must be persuaded that it is no mere game they are playing but a matter of life and death; that behind the Reds who come forth willingly to the slaughter there are hundreds, thousands, even hundreds of thousands who, while not outwardly Reds are really crimson colored and all the more dangerous for their protean disguises. It is these alleged Reds, who deny they are Reds at all, who are really the quarries of the chase.

This is absolutely essential if there is to be any worth-while Red Scare at all. For no country outside of Russia has any large or truly formidable contingent of Reds. This is particularly true in democratic lands. The Communist Party in Great Britain, for instance, is so small as to be insignificant. Out of 615 seats in the House of Commons only one is occupied by a genuine Red. In the French Chamber the Communists are more numerous than they once were, but only because their shade of crimson is paler than it used to be. Even then they are outnumbered nearly six to one by non-Communists. Even in Germany the Communists, on the eve of Hitler's coming into power polled less than a sixth of the total vote that was cast. And in this country no Communist has ever got nearer to Congress than the visitors gallery.

It is clear, therefore, that an effective Red hunt must use a squirt-gun heavily loaded with crimson paint as its principal weapon. If there are not enough Reds to make a menace it is necessary to create them. The Socialists have for years been carrying on a violent polemic against the Communists. But look you, say the Red hunters, the official title of Red Russia is the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, ergo, Socialist and Communist are the same. The liberals believe in freedom of speech for all—including Reds. Ipso facto they are Red sympathizers. Reds believe in the nationalization of industry. All those who believe in extending governmental controls may therefore be regarded as agents of Moscow. Socialists, Liberals, New Dealers; those who believe that the first amendment to the Constitution is as important as any other provision in that document; those who believe in collective bargaining, social security and unemployment relief, and all others who are the victims of the Red hunters' paint-pots may deny any connection with the Communists or communism. But this, the world is informed, is what makes them all the more dangerous.

Does all this sound fantastic? Certainly. Yet that is exactly the technique that was successfully employed in Germany by the Nazis for the purpose of ridding the land of the Reds. It is not so certain that they succeeded in this purpose. The very fact that they now find it necessary to carry on the Red hunt beyond Germany's borders shows that they are not entirely convinced of efficacy of their methods. But there is no question that they did rid the Reich of freedom of speech, of press, of assembly, of religious freedom in the real sense of that term, of labor unions, the spirit of inquiry and indeed of many of those elementary decencies which old-fashioned folk regard as the hall-mark of civilization.

Nothing succeeds like success. The Hitler technique, borrowed from Mussolini, who borrowed it from the Reds when they were carrying on an anti-Red hunt in Russia, has been adopted in whole or in part by Red scaremongers everywhere. It is being applied by Lady Lucy Houston, Britain's eccentric millionairess who hates communism even more than she does colds and has recipes for the cure of both; by Lord Rothermere, sinister press lord of Great Britain; by the dandified Oswald Mosley; by the reptile press of France; and for some time now by Mr. William Randolph Hearst.

Long ago Anatole France said that no idea is harder to destroy than that which rests on no foundations. The Red hunters are acting on that premise. Their Red Scare is nothing more or less than the old-fashioned Sucker Stew without even a rabbit to give it body.

The Olympic Games

By William Lyon Phelps.

Jesse Owens.

The astounding performances of Owens at the Olympic games at Berlin mark him as one of the greatest athletes in history, and make me wonder what is the actual limit of human ability. It is certain, I suppose, that no human being will ever run 100 yards in five seconds; but is it (or isn't it!) possible that some day the distance will be run in eight seconds?

Will any human being ever jump 10 feet high? Or 30 feet flat? The latter, however incredible it may have seemed twenty years ago, is now within the realm of probability. All these things make track athletics exciting, and add interest to the exploits of Owens, of Ohio State University.

Furthermore, it is agreeable to see how Owens impressed a very intelligent British trained observer, who acted as special correspondent for the London Spectator:

"The applause at the stadium during the first day's contests was generous and reasonably impartial, and the German spectators, like all others, have fallen completely under the spell of the American Negro, Jesse Owens, who is already the hero of these games. Fortunately, Owens is a charmingly courteous and modest person, or the adulation that he is receiving here would turn his head. In his two races yesterday, in which he first equaled and then beat the world's record for 100 meters, he made his opponents look almost ridiculous, not only by his speed but by the sheer beauty of his running. No athletic art has ever been so perfectly concealed. When other great runners are straining and contorting themselves in a supreme effort Owens is gliding magically away from them: he too is making his supreme effort, but there is not the slightest trace of angularity or strain. One only realizes his speed by noticing how long it takes him to pull up afterward. The Germans, with their strong aesthetic sense and their present adoration of physical skill, are enraptured by his running. His name is cheered as soon as it is announced before a race, and when he is going back to the dressing room afterward the spectators all along the track shout to him to stop so that they can photograph him. Whatever the currents beneath the smooth surface of this festival, we are all one people when Owens is on the track.

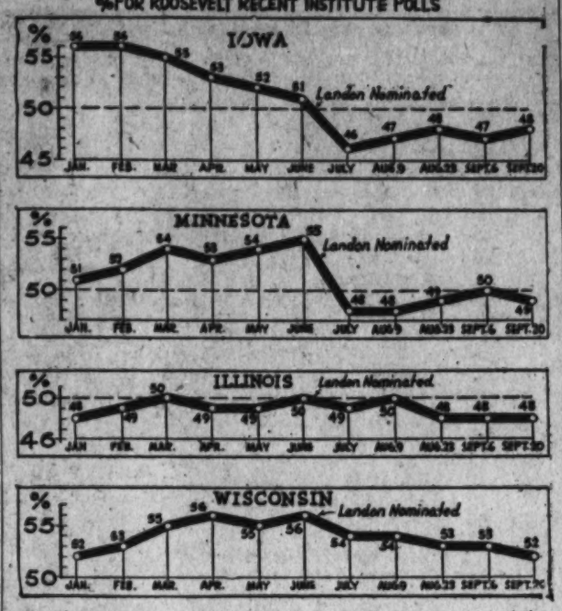
TREND OF DEMOCRATIC POPULARITY IN FOUR STATES
As For Roosevelt Recent Institute Polls



The strategic reasons for Gov. Alfred M. Landon's swing around the Midwest beginning today are indicated in the above chart, prepared by Dr. George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion. The figures for the President's popularity, based on polls conducted by the Institute for many months, show that Roosevelt and Landon are running a close race in the four States which the Republican nominee will invade—Iowa, Minnesota, Illinois and Wisconsin. Gov. Landon's task is to hold and, if possible, increase his slight lead in the first three, and to make enough converts in Wisconsin to erase the President's current majority there. Sixty-three electoral votes are at stake in the four States.

cent to that which the Japanese navy has occupied. Landing of large forces of Japanese bluejackets in 1932, following an attack on Japanese Buddhist missionaries by a Chinese mob, led to the Shanghai war, in which thousands were killed, and the Nineteenth Route Army, commanded by Gen. Tsai Ting-Kai, was expelled from the Shanghai area after more than a month of bitter fighting.

"Grave" Situation Feared.

Tokyo, Sept. 23 (AP).—Government spokesmen expressed fear of an "extremely grave" situation in China tonight as Admiral Osumi Nagano, minister of the navy, canceled plans to accompany Emperor Hirohito on a tour of army and navy maneuvers after reports three Japanese sailors had been shot, one fatally, in Shanghai.

The navy minister took direct charge of Japanese fleet operations in China. His hasty decision was viewed in political circles as of vital significance because of the near-compulsion that cabinet ministers feel toward accompanying the Emperor on such trips.

The Domei (Japanese) News Agency said the acting Japanese consul general at Shanghai filed protests both with the International Settlement and municipal authorities of Shanghai.

Emperor Hirohito boarded his flagship to attend army maneuvers on the northern island of Hokaido before the Shanghai incident was reported.

As commander in chief of the empire's forces, he is to spend the next month traveling from one end of Japan to the other supervising war games.

Miss Alfaro Is Bride of Mr. Weller

Leaders of Diplomatic Corps Are Present at Ceremony.

By Marylyn Reeve.

A warm, sunny day added to the gaiety of the wedding yesterday of Senorita Amelita Alfaro, daughter of the former Minister of Panama and Senora de Alfaro, and Mr. Frank Harlow Weller, son of Mrs. Weller and the late Mr. Francis R. Weller.

A brilliant assemblage gathered at St. Matthew's Church long before the hour of the ceremony. Chiefs of missions, officials and their ladies and members of the younger set, many of whom made their debut with the bride last winter, were there.

The altar was banked with a profusion of white chrysanthemums and lilies, delicate gladioli and dark palms. Preceding the ceremony, Mme. Malda Fani sang.

Ushers Lead Procession.

The ushers led the bridal procession. They were Mr. Ivan Alfaro and Mr. Rogelio Alfaro, brothers of the bride; Mr. Hanlon O'Donnell, Mr. John Kerkam, Mr. Kenneth Yeatman and Mr. Jerome Murphy.

Then came the bridesmaids, Miss Gloria Sacasa with Miss Laura Recinos, Miss Jean Gilbert with Miss Olga Arosemena, of Panama, and Miss Dorothy Dietz and Mrs. William Curtin, sister of the bridegroom. Their frocks were of rust slipper satin fashioned with yokes of cording across the shoulders and long, slightly flaring skirts. On their heads were butterfly bows of velvet in the same shade.

Miss Yolande Alfaro, young sister of the bride, and maid of honor, wore a gown and hat of peacock blue, and carried a sheaf of pale gold chrysanthemums, as did the other attendants.

Bride in Satin and Lace.

Dr. Alfaro escorted his daughter to the altar, where Mr. Weller and his brother, Mr. Richard Hartmann Weller, who was best man, awaited them. The bride's gown was of ivory satin and old lace. The long sleeves and yoke of the bodice were of lace. The skirt fell in a full rounded train. The narrow standing collar was caught at the throat with an antique pearl brooch. The bride's dark curls were banded with a braid of tulle, from which fell a filmy veil. She carried a sunburst bouquet of lilies of the valley.

After the ceremony, which was performed by Msgr. Edward L. Buckey, there was a reception at the Washington Club. The couple, with their families and bridesmaids, received in the reception hall, which was decorated with white fall flowers and ferns.

Mme. Alfaro's gown of mother-of-pearl satin, with a faint rose tint, was made with a high shirred neckline, and she wore a wide-brimmed hat of brown felt, banded with satin of the lighter shade. Mrs. Weller wore a gown of purple velvet. Her small turban was of the same material and shade.

The Mexican Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera were accompanied by their daughter, Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, who was in bright blue crepe, and her cousin, Senorita Lupe Davila, whose costume was of black.

Behind them were the Ambassador of Cuba, Dr. Guillermo Patterson y de Jauregui, his daughter, Senorita Olga Patterson, and his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schlatter, the latter in maroon crepe with a small hat of the same shade

Other Guests Present

The three daughters of the Chilean Ambassador were there. Senorita Rebeca and Senorita Graciela were in black, the former with large buttons of brilliants at the neck of her dress, and the latter with scarlet touches on her frock and a matching quill in her peaked hat. Senorita Marta chose gray for her ensemble, with accents of ruby.

Other guests were Miss Leonie McCoy, in a red and white print; the Secretary of the Mexican Embassy, Senor Don Rafael Fuentes; the Minister of Guatemala and Senora de Recinos, the Commercial Counselor of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell and their daughter, Senorita Eleanor Campbell.

Also present were the Minister of Denmark, Mr. Otto Wadsted; the Ambassador of Turkey and Mme. Munir Ertegun, the latter in a smart black and white print with a wide-brimmed black straw hat; Mrs. John Kerkam, herself a bride of only a few weeks, in black with a bit of vivid green on her hat; Miss Sally Mitchell LeFevre and Mr. Arthur Clephane, Mr. Clem Conger, Mrs. Stephen Nealon, jr., in black with a white lace collar and panel down the front of her chiffon frock; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Mme. Pastoriza, the latter in black with a huge cluster of orchids pinned on her silver foxes; the Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri, she in navy blue, printed with coral figures; Miss Mary Katherine Spinks, Mrs. D. C. Sobotka and her son, Mr. John Sobotka, and Mrs. Henry H. Palmer and her daughter, Miss Virginia Palmer.

Foibles and Folks

By MARYLYN

Do you know who led the parade yesterday morning? John Boettiger! That does surprise you, doesn't it? Well, the gentleman in question had two things on his mind—meeting his wife anna Roosevelt Boettiger and going swimming. Off he started, bound for the east entrance of the White House. But he was stopped and informed that because of the G. A. R. parade, he could not get through there.

The result was that he went out the front entrance, turned west on the Avenue with the intention of going around the Executive Mansion and back down town. Just as he emerged from the gate and made the turn he looked back and found himself closely followed (right on his spare tire in fact) by uniformed figures astride motorcycles, the advance guard of the parade. Down the rest of the block he went, falling in with a like pace, until a corner enabled him to escape.

Amelita Alfaro's wedding yesterday to Frank Weller was a very beautiful and impressive sight and something not soon to be forgotten.

There was the usual excitement in the air, in handsome St. Matthew's, with dignitaries arriving in long, shining limousines, dismounting at the curb and proceeding up the long canvas-covered lane. The policemen, resplendent in their uniforms, seemed to have left their usual rather brusk manners somewhere along the way and patiently, willingly and delightedly directed the mass of creeping cars.

* * * *

Inside, numerous tapers winked on the altar and a faint glow from the late afternoon sun filtered in through the windows high overhead. There was the buzz of conversation—sister debs of the bride talking in excited little groups, guessing or trying to guess who would be the next of their number to wear satin and tulle—diplomats discussing everything in general in their own tongues—and so on.

* * * *

For a time, after the last guest had been shown to his pew, there was silence, and not a sign of the bridal party; then as if by magic, there they were at the doorway—in formation. Amelita, following her six attendants, and on the arm of her father, paused a moment as two friends, battling with the unruly wind from the door, endeavored to arrange her train and veil—then on she went, the long satin falling in a perfect semicircle, the veil gently resting on it like a very fine mist.

* * * *

It seemed one of the quickest wedding ceremonies we have ever witnessed. In no time at all the triumphant strains of the recessional rang out and back they came—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harlow Weller. Happily they grinned at each other, and smiled at what to them must have been a sea of faces bordering the aisle.

At the club, after the photographers had had their session, there was the reception—gay, crowded and altogether a jolly affair.

Rogelio Alfaro, tall, handsome brother of the bride, was off in a corner surrounded by friends. In the line Mrs. Parker West was enthusiastically admiring Ogla Patterson's newest hat—a minute business of black crepe, turned and tucked into myriad points and ridges and topped with a cluster of pink and rose flowers. "Why, it is so little it is cute," exclaimed the major's wife, Dr. Patterson, smiling over his daughter's shoulder, laughed and jokingly all but plucked the object of attention from the blonde head.

There was much introducing everywhere, and it seemed that every other person was an Alfaro—there are lots of cousins in the family. One chap—Jaimie Alfaro—had to do some rapid explaining as to why and how he could be here from West Point, then it appeared that he is another Jaimie Alfaro. When everyone had had champagne, punch, ices and delicious cakes, Amelita started up the winding stairway, turned and tossed her bouquet. There were startled cries, and then a trio of her attendants were deadlocked for the flowers (quite reminiscent of Zoe Patterson's wedding last year). The final winner was Jean Gilbert, who had lost her hat in the excitement. She wasn't the first to claim the blossoms, because minutes earlier Mark Schapiro had gone about proudly showing a spray of lilies of the valley in his lapel. Out front where "William," with an audience of two little boys, stouted car numbers, the guests formed a send-off party to speed the young couple on their way.

They will motor somewhere—a secret—but will be in New York on the 26th to bid bon voyage to Ivan Alfaro, who on that day sails for Argentina. Upon their return they will be at home at La Reine on Connecticut avenue.

Miss Fellows Becomes Bride Of Mr. Wiseman

Couple to Live in Glover Park After Trip to Virginia Beach.

Miss Frances A. Fellows, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Fellows, of Washington, yesterday became the bride of Mr. Roy A. Wiseman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy H. Wiseman, also of this city. The Covenant First Presbyterian Church was the scene of the wedding, performed by the Rev. Dr. Albert J. McCartney.

The church was decorated with palms, fall flowers and candles. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin, made on princess lines, with a long train, and a veil of heirloom lace, which formed a coronet. Her shower banquet was of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

The bridesmaids were Miss Theo Heimerle, of Oswego, N. Y., and Miss Myrton Bronson, of Beacon Falls, Conn., who wore royal blue, and Mrs. Paul Fellows, of Washington, and Mrs. C. Don Warnick, of Catonsville, Md., who wore copper-colored taffeta. Their gowns were of a design similar to that of the maid of honor, and they carried yellow and bronze chrysanthemums.

Mr. Donald B. Pollack was best man. The ushers were Mr. William King, Mr. James Buffington, Mr. Paul Fellows, Mr. C. Don Warnick, Mr. Edward Hopper and Mr. John Thornberry.

A reception at the home of the bride's parents, 818 Buchanan street, followed the ceremony. There, too, fall flowers and palms were used in decoration. The bride's mother wore fuschia velvet and a corsage of gardenias, and the bridegroom's mother, a gown of dark blue satin and a corsage of talisman roses, as they received with the bridal couple.

The bride wore for her traveling costume a three-piece gray suit, with a wolf collar, and blue accessories. After a wedding trip to Virginia Beach, the couple will live at 3911 W street, Glover Park.

Out-of-town guests included Mrs. John Fellows, of Pasadena, Calif.; Mrs. Harriet Arner, of Plainfield, N. J.; Mrs. James Maddux, of St. Petersburg, Fla.; Miss Alice Compton, of Belleville, N. J., and Mrs. Mott Peck, Miss Evelyn Weinss, Mrs. Albert Zinke, Mrs. W. W. Inglis, Mrs. John W. Howell, Mrs. A. E. Morse, and Mrs. J. E. Scheifly, all of Scranton, Pa.

Hollands Return From Wedding Trip in Europe

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Holland, whose marriage took place at the home of the bride in Lexington, Mass., last July, have just returned from their wedding trip through Europe. Mr. Holland, who is a member of the American Youth Commission, came directly to Washington, and Mrs. Holland will join him here Saturday after a brief visit with her mother, Mrs. Franklin R. Kimball, in Lexington.

Mrs. Holland is the former Miss Mary Kimball, who was prominent while a student at Smith College, both as an accomplished musician and as an aviator. She has visited in the Capital on frequent occasions and has many friends here.

Following their marriage, she and Mr. Holland spent a short time in New England and then sailed, aboard the Bremen, for Europe. They took their car and toured across Germany into Sweden, Denmark, back through Germany, into Czechoslovakia, Austria, Switzerland, France and England.

Mr. Holland made an extensive survey of the educational aspects of the systems of work camps in the various countries and, October 1, will begin a comprehensive study of the educational program of the CCC camps of this country. He and his bride were entertained by officials in many of the places they visited as well as by friends living in Europe. They returned aboard the Columbus and had one or two bad days at the end of the trip due to the hurricane.

Mrs. MacWhite Back From Erin

Mrs. Michael MacWhite, wife of the Minister of the Irish Free State, who has been in Ireland for the summer, has returned to Washington, accompanied by Mr. MacWhite, who met her in New York on her arrival Sunday aboard the Columbus. The Minister also was in Ireland, but returned here three weeks ago.

During their summer abroad, the Minister and Mrs. MacWhite visited her relatives in Denmark, her native country, and then traveled through Ireland. Mrs. MacWhite, who is an artist, found many scenes for her canvases along the Irish countryside and, at the request of her friends in Washington, may hold an exhibition of her work here.

Although she has shown her paintings at important exhibitions in New York for several years, she has never had an exhibition in the Capital. In her apartment at the Shoreham are many beautiful landscapes which are her work.

Society Notes

The United States Ambassador to Belgium, Mr. Dave Hennen Morris, who has been at the Ambassador Hotel in New York City, following his summer holidays spent in Bar Harbor, Me., sailed yesterday in the S. S. Washington to resume his post in Brussels. He is accompanied by Mrs. Morris.

The Minister of Sweden and Mme. Bostrom will arrive in New York on Monday aboard the Gripsholm. They are returning to this country after spending the summer months in their homeland.

The Chief Justice of the Territory of Hawaii, Judge James L. Coke, and Mrs. Coke have arrived at the Shoreham and will remain through the week. They left Honolulu a month ago and have been touring the States since arriving in this country.

The President of the University of Panama and Senora de Mendez-Pereira, are in Washington for a brief visit before returning to their home. Dr. Mendez-Pereira was a special delegate from his university to the Tercentenary celebration at Harvard.

Mrs. Frank Hight has as her guest her sister, Mrs. L. H. Greenwood, of Boston, Mass., who came to Washington to attend the wedding of Miss Lucy Matheson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Matheson, and Mr. Frank Hight, which took place Saturday at Wellington, the Matheson's home.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies are again in Washington and are occupying their apartment at the Shoreham for a few days but expect to return to New York later. They have closed their camp in the Adirondacks, where they passed most of the summer.

Mrs. William Eldon Doeller and her son are at the St. Regis Hotel in New York.

The faculty of Immaculata Seminary entertained last night with a welcome dinner for resident students attending there.

Col. and Mrs. Lewis W. Cass have returned to the Wardman Park Hotel after spending two months in Europe.

Mrs. Paul E. Howe is at the Hotel New Weston during her stay in New York City.

Return From Europe.

Dr. and Mrs. James A. Flynn, who spent the summer in Europe have returned to the city. Dr. Flynn attended the International Congress of the Ear, Nose and Throat Specialists as the official delegate for the United States.

Dr. Viteri Here To Help Settle Frontier Dispute

Dr. Homero Viteri, former Minister of Ecuador to the United States, has arrived here as chief of the Ecuadorian delegation to discuss the boundary lines between Ecuador and Peru, in which President Roosevelt is to act as the arbitrator.

Dr. Viteri is accompanied by Senora de Viteri, their daughter, Senorita Rosita Viteri, and their sons, Jorge and Billy. The latter was given an American name because he was born while they lived in the United States.

Ladies of G.A.R. Are Feted Here

Delegates and national officers from 30 States were present yesterday at the luncheon given at the Raleigh Hotel for the 500 ladies of the G. A. R. here for the convention. It was held in the ballroom, which was decorated in gold and yellow for the golden jubilee of the organization. Many of the guests wore costumes of gold satin, further carrying out the color scheme.

Among the guests at the speakers' table, at which were 17 past national presidents, was Mrs. Clara Sawyer, of California, oldest of the group. Mrs. Wynnye G. Williamson, national president, presided, and Mrs. Margaret Worrell, chairman of arrangements, extended the greeting.

Envoy From Japan Entertains Today For Mr. Yoshizawa

The Ambassador of Japan, Mr. Hirosi Saito, will entertain at an informal luncheon at the embassy today in honor of Mr. Kenkichi Yoshizawa, former minister of foreign affairs, who is in Washington for a short visit.

Yesterday the Ambassador was host at an informal dinner at the embassy to welcome Mr. Yoshizawa, with members of the embassy staff as guests. Those at the luncheon today will include the Ambassador of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Mr. Alexander A. Troyanovsky, officials of the State Department and members of the embassy staff.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I want to do exactly what "Bachelor" objects to in your column of September 21: namely, pursue a man. He goes to a church down in the country where I have been going lately and I just noticed him last Sunday. All I know about him is his name and that he is not married. I learned the latter by inquiring for his child, making believe I thought he was the father of a child sitting near him in church. He was very cordial but I was embarrassed so I made as quick a getaway as I could.

• • • •

While I am in my late thirties I am as green as a child where men are concerned. If you will just tell me how to go about engaging this man in conversation without too pointedly making a grab for him I will appreciate it so much. If there is a way to do it, you will know it, I am sure, for you certainly seem to know all the answers.

• • • •

Your column is a joy and I have never missed it a single time since it started. Thanking you in advance for anything you can suggest, or for a scolding if that is what I deserve, I am, an OLD MAID.

Case for Restraint.

DEAR OLD MAID: I do feel like scolding you. Not for your wholly excusable designs on the eligible man, but for having muffed that elegant opening you made for yourself last Sunday. Now, if there is one attribute of personality a woman in her latter thirties should possess, it is poise of mind and body. And if you had possessed the poise due your years, you would never have permitted a momentary attack of embarrassment to disorganize you so completely. On the contrary, you would have registered embarrassment, apologized for your mistake and made that mistake the motif of a lingering, laughing conversation—providing, of course, the man showed any inclination to continue the conversation.

• • • •

Unfortunately, I have few suggestions to make for engaging strange men in conversation. If one is the type who makes conversation easily with all and sundry, one needs no pointers as to how to break the ice. And if one isn't, all the pointers in the world won't help one much.

• • • •

The best advice I can give you is to attend every church service you think the man is likely to attend; to wear your very smartest clothes and look your very prettiest self; and give him a pleasant smile and a word of greeting whenever opportunity for doing so presents itself. If you find yourself at his elbow coming out of church, or meet him in the vestibule, you might comment on the day's unusual weather, the inspirational quality of the pastor's sermon, the surprising size—large or small, as the case may be—of the congregation; or you might say, "Oh, how do you do? It's nice to see you again. I see you like our church. Where's your little girl today?" thus making facetious reference to your mistake of the preceding Sunday.

If he seem at all responsive to your overtures, you might carry on by chatting about some similar blunder you made once; or that an acquaintance made; or that you had read or heard about. You might tell some amusing incident that occurred to you once when you were a newcomer to a strange congregation. You might ask him if he noticed that you almost fell over the pews getting away from him after you realized your mistake; and add that you are constantly making resolutions to cultivate more poise, but never seem to get around to it.

If you don't come into conversational range with him again, after two or three Sundays you might ask someone who knows him to introduce him to you. Be casual and candid about it. You might word it something like this: "Who is that man? He seems awfully nice. I'd like to meet him. Do bring him over."

• • • •

Other than this, there is little if anything you can do. A woman nearing middle age, who lacks ease of manner with men, simply can't afford to make herself ridiculous by openly running after one. What pursuing she does must be done adroitly and mostly under cover. M. H.

Seeks a Job.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 18 and graduated from high school last June. I desire to have more education. But not being financially able to obtain more education without working to earn the necessary fee, I would like to find a position that would permit me to work by day and go to school at night. Ever since my graduation I have tried to find work but so far have been able to find odd jobs only. These jobs haven't paid enough to save anything for education. Can you and will you help me to secure employment? Very truly yours.

J. B.

DEAR J. B.: What can you do? You haven't said. Therefore, I cannot offer any practicable suggestions as to whether you might look for the kind of job you want. And it is a sad but true fact that there is little opportunity in the business world today for untried high school graduates who have nothing much to offer in the way of specialized training. Have you talked over your ambitions with your parents, or with your high school teachers or principal? Surely they should be able to give you some suggestions as to how to promote yourself. They know your abilities, your background, the resources you have to draw upon.

• • • •

It seems to me if you were an exceptionally bright and ambitious girl you would have been able to make your odd jobs a stepping stone to better things. No matter what size a job may be in the beginning, it usually takes on the proportions of the person handling it. My advice to you is not to despise those old jobs, but to do them with a will, meanwhile keeping your eye peeled for the beckoning hand of opportunity. M. H.

Dilettante Artist Creates Career With Snapshots

By Elizabeth Young.

THEY MET five years ago at the Art League in New York City. He was a dark-faced, serious young artist of Russian blood. She was an amber-haired Viking, a curiously wistful young creature who was trying to "find herself," as the phrase goes. She dabbled at dancing, drawing, sculpturing. They were much interested in each other and then they drifted apart. Later their paths crossed again in Washington—whether by accident or design is not recorded—and two years ago they were married.

In the whimsical way of artists, they celebrated by buying themselves a wedding present. Their money was spent on a miniature camera—the kind of camera that takes the kind of picture that photographers call a candid-camera shot. And in that giddy gesture the young bride found herself, insofar as artistic self-expression is concerned.

Watching her husband play with the camera in his leisure hours, watching him take so-called "candid shots" of persons in restaurants, on the streets, in trolley cars, at football games, on park benches; watching him record fleeting expressions and movements and moods in persons and nature that the most gifted artist seldom captures with the more plodding medium of brush or pen, Masha Schatt decided that the camera lens was a medium peculiarly suited to her.

Why? Because with clear-thinking Yankee directness, this Masha Schatt, who was born Clara Harriet Eriksen, of Fitchburg, Mass, had already decided she was a dilettante among the artists, but a dilettante whose love for the atmosphere of fine arts was urgent and imperishable.

"I discovered in printing my husband's pictures that the camera brought me into the atmosphere of all those things I'm interested in. I found myself thinking of the camera as a medium of art ranking with sculpting, drawing, painting, music, dramatics. I learned that the camera lens records life as it is, yet always with a new approach or slant.

"And while I was terrified to try my hand at art photography, nevertheless I did. And with the camera I had beginner's luck. My first snap, taken in a local theater, of a comedy vaudeville team at the height of its act, was a real success." This bit of art portraiture, titled "Caught in the Act," will be shown with a dozen or more companion pieces at a one-man show which Miss Schatt will stage at King-Smith Studio School in early October.

Miss Schatt's services as teacher of art photography have been enlisted by the school for the coming winter, and the show will introduce her and her work to students and patrons of the institution. Her connection with the school came about in an off-hand fashion.

Everybody Satisfied.

One day, with her camera strapped on her shoulder and a portfolio of portraits—as she calls her pictures—under her arm, Miss Schatt drifted into a local art gallery and there fell into conversation with a group of girls from the King-Smith School. They liked her pictures and her personality, and impulsively invited her to their dormitory to make portraits of themselves. This she did and pleasure in the results was mutual. Eventually, her excellent work came to the attention of the heads of the school, and it was decided to add art photography to the cultural curriculum of the school, with Miss Schatt in the role of mentor.

Small and slight of stature, with wide-apart brown eyes and the heart shaped face of an old-fashioned child; invariably appareled in distinctive costumes of her own design and manufacture which blandly ignore the prevailing mode, but are none the less effective for all that, Miss Schatt is the sort of person who causes heads to turn in her direction wherever she goes. And for all one knows, she is altogether unaware of her differentness from other women.

In her conversation, her husband, Ray C. Schatt, is the main theme. One learns it was he who christened her "Masha," simply by calling her "Masha" until she forgot she ever had another baptismal name; that he thinks she is a good cook, although she is not so sure; that she depends on him for help when she gets in a jam designing her clothes; that it is he who is mainly responsible for what success she has made of art pohtography as a career, and that in her opinion the best pictures she has made had him as the subject. Her favorite is a snap showing her husband maneuvering a grounded catboat off a sand bar at Bay Head, N. J.

Books Form Best Contact For Children

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

ONE of the easiest and most effective means of making contacts with a child is through books. Long before the child can himself read he can understand what is read to him, and even before that he can look at pictures and enjoy the story that they tell.

In many households it is the mother alone who assumes the duty and pleasures of introducing the children to books. She it is who reads Mother Goose, and takes them into the mysteries and joys of fairyland and folklore.

Why not the father, too? Surely there is opportunity here for both parents. The grown man's mouth may water at the thought of "apple pies my mother used to make," but there is no reason why one echo from the past should not be "stories my father used to read."

Perhaps the man of the house is too busy to read aloud every day. But surely any man can find the time to read aloud for half an hour a couple of times a week. He must choose his books carefully so that his listeners will wait impatiently for the next installment, and should see to it that to him only belongs the privilege of reading that particular book.

Part of the benefit of reading to the children comes from the mutual background which it establishes. The readers and hearers have a common subject of thought and discussion. From children's stories they all graduate together to books of more general interest, such as travel, discovery, history. New and widening fields of contact are constantly established. If the children are given some choice in the matter of books and topics the hours will prove even more enjoyable and memorable occasions. The family solidarity thus produced is worth the sacrifice of an occasional game of golf, evening at the club or a visit to the theater.

Pockets in Sleeves Are Proving Popular

Shunned for Poor Speech

"I'm real sorry for the hired help at Mrs. Catt's boarding house," she says. "She does all she can to aggravate them. That's no way to learn 'em."

Using "real" for "very;" the provincial term "hired help" for "servants" or "employes;" "aggravate" for "annoy;" "learn" for "teach" — that's the kind of error that simply brands you!

Other favorite slips of Carrie's are: "I didn't use to like them books" for "I never used to like those books;" "I sat opposite of John" for "I sat opposite to John;" "Those are identically the same" for "Those are identical" or "Those are the same."

Sometimes, feeling vaguely that something is wrong with her speech, Carrie tries to be very grand. She'll say "The street is very noisome today," under the impression that "noisome" is a refined term for "noisy." Of course it means "ill-smelling."

So Carrie's rating herself, and people take her at her own low rating. They think she's cheap, dull, socially impossible. No wonder she meets frowns and snubs everywhere!

Arm yourself against telltale English with our 40-page booklet, "Common Errors in English." There they are listed—the pitfalls that betray you! Note them. Get rid of them. Start your speech campaign now!

An Artist With the Camera and Her Favorite Subject

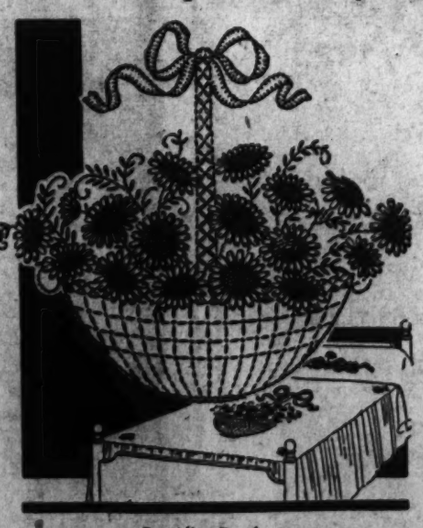
Elizabeth Hawes Gets Fall Outfit

Elizabeth Hawes has designed her new fall collection with thought in mind that everyone's in a mood to be quite gay . . . exceedingly female, and as seductive as possible.

The general silhouette is definitely Puritan . . . fitted waists, tight sleeves, and a slightly above natural waistline from which flare wide and full skirts. These skirts are cut in a bewildering number of ways (many are actually shirred on) but always with the same general effect of billowing in a flattering fashion when you walk. As for the length of skirts, Problem No. 1 of each season, Hawes has shortened them . . . shows them in sport things about 12 inches from the floor and a little longer in the afternoon things.

She has made a radical change in the length of evening and dance dresses, and one that has met with the heartiest approval of the ladies who have tried them. Instead of trains that tangle or trip you while you dance, the Hawes' skirts swing gayly 2 to 4 inches from the floor . . . the fuller the skirt, the more your ankles show.

Lazy Daisy Posies in Color Give Bed Spreads Gay Motif



By Alice Brooks.

Pattern 5675

EMBROIDER the lazy daisy posies in color—the basket in running stitch and, in a trice, you'll have a spread that will add charm to the entire room. The flowers can be in mixed pastel colors, in two shades of one color or all in one color. So you see, there's plenty of variety to choose from. Small motifs are included for corners and bolster. In pattern 5675 you will find a transfer pattern of a basket 17x99 inches, a motif 2½x18 inches, and four sprays 2½x3¼ inches; material requirements; color suggestions; illustrations of all stitches needed.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) to The Washington Post, Household Arts Dept., 259 W. 14th Street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

Effects of Head Blows.

Among boxers—those who engage in the sport made famous by Mendoza, Gentleman Jackson, John Barty, and Natty Bell—there may be found a well recognized type of deterioration which is sometimes termed "slug nutty" or "punch drunk." The nature of the condition has been investigated through studies on a large number of athletes.

A typical case is thus related. A lad trains as an amateur boxer with a laudable desire to improve his physical prowess. He becomes reasonably expert and is opposed by good men—receiving considerable punishment during a score or so of matches. Because of his success he becomes a professional, engages in longer fights, and hence meets more formidable opposition.

During four years in the ring he is matched in 40 or more bouts. At this time his friends observe that his tolerance for head blows has become reduced. Whenever he receives a hard punch on the jaw he remains dazed for a longer period. His legs become shaky and afterward he states that they felt numb. His offensive, therefore, is not as vigorous as it had been. Nevertheless, he insists that he is in A1 shape although he loses encounters which formerly would have been won with ease. Even his close associates notice that he had changed. In fact, memory, attention and concentration are definitely decreased.

E. J. Carroll, jr., who has gone into the subject carefully, reports that some of these subjects—in the midst of a conversation—will lapse into a revery, reverse the train of thought, or ask the same question several times. In a few instances an impediment of speech will be noted. These symptoms will progress for a year or so when they become stationary. In severe cases the voice is thick, halting, and guttural; and headache, dizziness, roaring in the ears, etc., are complained of occasionally.

Despite all symptoms, the punch drunk individual rarely realizes that anything is wrong, although those who are wise will plan retirement as soon as early signs appear. Carroll cites Gene Tunney's experience in which he boxed several rounds with his sparring partner without the slightest recollection of the incident. His lapse of memory occurred after he had been struck havily on the jaw. Carroll believes that 60 per cent of the fighters who remain in the ring for a period of five years or more will develop obvious mental and emotional changes.

Just what happens? As most of us know, the brain is composed of both gray and white material. Each has its own specific gravity. Therefore, each will move at a different rate of speed. Thus we can understand how cells may be torn. It would seem certain that a force sufficiently powerful to cause a knockout would result in some permanent damage. They need only to be repeated to bring on a lessening of the power of quick response. Apparently the force of a pugilist's glove may be tantamount to a concussion which is often followed by tiny hemorrhages into the brain substance.

It is difficult to conceive how a jar to the brain sufficient to cause unconsciousness—even for a few minutes—will not be followed by engorgment of the blood vessels. Let us assume that such jolts are received many times in the course of a year or two, and we have the explanation for the loss of nerve filaments which make for alertness.

All of which is of interest in connection with accidents involving the skull arising from any and all sources. Participants in sports where falls are frequent should realize that they are risking brain injury. Football players particularly should wear headguards so as to break the force of impacts.

We must not regard lightly any type of unconsciousness. While the bony covering of the brain is reasonably thick, contact with a hard object that comes suddenly may lead to bleeding from vessels within the brain. Complete rest is imperative for at least 24 hours.

Tomato Recipes Now Are Sought In Post Contest

FRESH tomatoes are so popular that it is only natural while they are still in season they should have been chosen as the theme of The Post recipe contest for this week.

Every Post food page reader is invited this week to submit her favorite recipe for preparing tomatoes to the Home Economics Editor in care of The Washington Post. Recipes for preserving, canning or pickling tomatoes may be entered as well as those for preparing tomatoes as a vegetable.

Cash awards will be offered for the best recipe submitted. The first prize is $5, the second $3, and the three remaining prizes are $1 each.

Only recipes that are typed or neatly written in ink will be considered eligible for a prize. It is requested that each contestant submit but one recipe.

Be sure to mail your entries in time to reach this office not later than Saturday morning.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

ALICE HUGHES.

WE PROBABLY have more free shows here than anywhere on earth—from civic receptions on the steps of City Hall, with the street cleaners' band giving out "Pomp and Circumstance," to the current excavation of poor old harassed Sixth avenue for a new subway. Probably the most amusing, yet pathetic, gratis entertainment is that put on each fine evening in Columbus Circle, where Eighth avenue, Fifty-ninth street and Central Park come together.

In that great open space a dozen or more prophets of every inconceivable type harangue the crowds that drift from one tent to the next. Each has a soap box, a faded American flag and a message. The other night I heard a seedy free-lance philosopher sound off on every subject that wandered through his jumbled mind, two or three radicals preaching the milk-and-honey wonders of their new world, a small and very soiled man telling three boys and a dog how to woo and win the girls of their choice, and a crackpot super-Freudian, who was illustrating his notion of the Viennese master's ideas with astounding chalk drawings on a blackboard. And, of course, there were two or three faded old ladies in faded black telling all who would listen momentarily of the love of God.

It's amusing, yes—and it's also a profound and pretty morbid course in the human desire to get it off the chest, whatever it may be. The traffic roars, the orators shout and sing, occasional bickerings break out which arouse the bored cop on duty—but no one pays much attention to anyone. Talk, talk, and blather, and the steam blown off there weekly would run the Ford plant a month!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—You know about our marrying Snowden sisters, do you? The two pretty girls who both married Italian princes, divorced them, married again and still are in the newspapers? One seems to be happy with a Hollywoodian named Gill, but the other, Marion, seems to be pouting at her three-month spouse, Mr. Louis Reid. These things wear New York newspaper readers down, after a bit. When I see a Snowden smiling up at me from the page, I have a mad impulse to scream and do a double jackknife out the window . . .

Speaking of sisters, and a nice subject it is, the famous trio of Pickens girls, whose radio warbling has been so popular, is being busted, temporarily. Jane is in the current "Follies," with the other two applauding on the sidelines.

The Federal Diary

Bibliofilms

A new film camera specially designed for the photographing of old newspaper files has just been installed in the basement of the Library of Congress.

The camera was made under the direction of Dr. R. H. Draeger of the Department of Commerce, the materials alone costing more than $400. All of the mountings and supports are of stainless steel. The platform on which the object to be photographed is rested has been equipped with a special stabilizing device that insures, no matter where a book is opened to, that both pages will lie perfectly even.

Three sizes of pictures can be taken with the camera, 16, 35 and 70 millimeters. The latter size permits the photographing of a full-sized newspaper page. Exposures are timed automatically and are released at the press of a button. Roughly 3,000 shots can be taken with the camera without reloading.

Eventually the new camera is to be used to photograph the library's crumbling files of wood-pulp newspapers. Before this project is started, however, Dr. Thomas Martin, in charge of the manuscript division, explained, considerable experimentation will be necessary. In the meantime the Library will use the camera to catch up on its orders for what is commonly known as bibliofilms.

For years the Library has maintained a photostat service through which any person could be provided with a copy of any document in the library. Since 1932, however, the Library has been developing a cheaper "bibliofilm" service by which documents are copied through microfilm cameras.

If the subscriber has his own projector he can purchase these microfilms at 3 cents a sheet, instead of the 25 cents a sheet charged for photostats. Full-sized proofs of the microfilm negatives are sold for 15 cents. Last year the Library microfilmed 3,200 frames. This year more than four times the business is expected, one order alone, for the reproduction of the Jefferson papers during the years he was ambassador to France, running up to 10,000 frames. Other requests have come from as far off spot as the universities of of Hawaii and Peking.

A Presidential order is pending for the transfer to the National Park Service of about 600 Resettlement Administration workers on 46 projects for land development for recreation.

President's Regatta

There's a fair chance that some of the honors in the President's Cup Regatta races tomorrow and Saturday will be won by Federal employes.

At least a dozen Government workers already have entered boats —Rexford Covert, of Resettlement; Harold H. Jacobs, Verner Smythe and G. C. Biddle, of the Patent Office; Fred Tilp, of National Capital Parks; Brent Drane, of Interior, and Thomas H. Tremearne, Drs. William Diehl, E. B. Lambert and Harry Humbold, of Agriculture.

An even greater number of aids of Uncle Sam are assisting in the regatta arrangements. Besides the members of the Cabinet and the President's secretaries, committee members are:

Regatta—Chester Adams, Internal Revenues; Arno B. Cammerer, National Park Service; C. Marshall Finnan, National Capital Parks, and Russell E. Singer and C. B. Bishop, of AAA.

Reviewing—Capt. R. C. Covell and Commander W. N. Darby, both Coast Guard; Dorsey W. Hyde, jr., National Archives; C. G. Jackson and Ivan A. Bickelhaupt, Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Eugene S. Leggett and Frank Brown, of the National Emergency Council, and Capt. H. C. Richardson, of Navy.

Starters—Frank Burke, Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Advisory—The Assistant Secretaries—of Interior, Oscar L. Chapman; of Treasury, S. B. Gibbons and Wayne C. Taylor; of Commerce, J. H. Johnson; of War, Harry H. Woodring—J. C. Peacock, director Shipping Board; Representatives Mary T. Norton and Jennings Randolph, and Capt. U. R. Webb, Navy Medical Center.

General—J. M. Fraile, Farm Credit Administration; Charles A. Peters, jr., National Park Service; Admiral G. T. Pettengill, Navy Yard, and Bruce Wilson, of Federal Housing.

Sailing—Alfred Hansen, Paul G. Tomalin and Ralph Winslow, all Coast Guard.

Also, Capt. Stephen C. Rowan and Lieut. Comdr. L. S. Perry, both Navy Yard, inspection; Arthur W. Ross, Office of Education, and Thomas S. Settle, Capital Park and Planning, night pageant; Eugene Vidal, Air Commerce, sponsors; A. Earle Weeks, Navy, aquatics sports; C. E. Ingling, White House, badges; Winfree Johnson, National Capital Parks, timers and judges; E. L. Luke, Naval Research Laboratory, miniature regatta, and Albert Clyde-Burton, Capital Parks, pits.

Retiring

Although there will be no retirements this month at the Government Printing Office, the Department of Agriculture will lose eight veteran employes.

Henry Hawxhurst, assistant clerk in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, is retiring after 35 years with the department. Lillian E. Kephart, also with the BAE after 18 years, and Frederick W. Pearce, senior clerk in the Bureau of Public Roads, after 18 years.

Retiring for disability and the length of their services are Hiram Kenner, junior laborer in the Bureau of Animal Industry, 26 years; Juanita L. Newlon, strenographer in the Weather Bureau, 18 years; Mrs. Susie C. Fortune, junior laborer in the Bureau of Plant Industry, 16 years; Mrs. Ethel L. Fountain, clerk in AAA, 14 years; and Wendell Rawlins, associate attorney in the office of the Secretary, 16 years.

Child Killed, Several Hurt In Accidents

One child was killed, another critically injured and several others hurt less seriously in traffic accidents last night.

Frank Gill, 8-year-old colored boy, of 617 Virginia avenue southeast, was crushed to death beneath wheels of a Capital Transit Co. truck a few yards from his home. His death brings the traffic toll for this year to 61. The dead from traffic at this time last year numbered 71.

The lad, witnesses said, was riding a scooter and darted in front of the truck, which was being towed by another.

The driver of the towed vehicle which crushed the lad, police said, was Charles E. Gilroy, 33, of 411 Twelfth street southeast. William C. Duley, jr., 32, 1618 Potomac avenue southeast, was the other operator. Both men were released in custody of Capital Transit Co. attorneys pending an inquest.

The boy was pronounced dead upon arrival at Providence Hospital.

Betty Lou was taken to Emergency Hospital and treated for skull and internal injuries.

The driver of the car, police said, was Carl C. Logan, colored, 38, of 2520 F street northwest. He is being held at the Second Precinct pending outcome of the girl's condition.

Thrown from the seat of a taxicab when the driver made a sudden stop after the vehicle struck a colored child, Mrs. Ada Sopher, 56, of 436 Luray place northwest, suffered a fracture of the right arm.

The cab, operated by Philip A. Gentilcore, 24, of 585 G street northeast, hit Annie L. Jones, 8, of 2119 Fourth street northeast, who ran into the street in front of her home. She was treated at Freedmen's Hospital for cuts and friction burns.

Three other children, all colored, were injured slightly by automobiles. They are: Robert Lempkin, 11, 923 Fourth street northwest, treated by a private physician for a possible fracture of the leg; James Tribble, 10, 5517 Hayes street northeast, also treated by a private doctor for lacerations to the eye and leg, and Arthur Barton, 4, of Wonder's Court southwest, treated at Providence Hospital for contusions to the lip and lacerations of the body.

Meanwhile, driving permits of two drivers were revoked and those of 23 others suspended for temporary periods yesterday by the revocations board because of speeding.

Will Speak to Ohio Voters.

Representative Maury Maverick, Democrat, of Texas, and Assistant Attorney General Joseph B. Keenan will address a meeting of the Ohio Voters' League to be held at 1500 Rhode Island avenue, today at 8 p. m. The league is composed of Ohio voters residing here and has nearly 1,500 members.

Trixie and Joseph H. Barnes.

Police, Rescue Squad and League Required to Extricate Ancient Canine From Mudpuddle; Owner to Have Him Destroyed Today.

This is the obituary of Trixie, an ordinary dog who finally had his day. Yesterday Trixie, who had lived 16 uneventful years, brought his career to a climax that baffled police, a fire rescue squad and the Animal Rescue League and that set an entire neighborhood into turmoil.

After 16 years of obscurity, Trixie was at last the center of interest. Today he will die.

Trixie's last feat was not glorious. It was even ignoble. Trixie got stuck in a mudpuddle and couldn't get out.

The dog is the property of Joseph H. Barnes, 2608 Dana place north west, who has had him since he was a pup. According to Barnes, Trixie has been in ill health for several days.

Yesterday morning residents in the 5200 block Conduit road northwest were disturbed by the plaintive barking of a dog. Investigating, they found Trixie stuck fast in the middle of a mud puddle.

Believing the dog to be caught in a trap, they called police, the fire rescue squad and the Animal Rescue League. Representatives of all three rushed to the scene, followed by neighborhood citizens and an escort of boys on bicycles.

Surveying the situation, the rescuers went to work with ropes. After extended efforts, Trixie was lassoed and hauled out, mudcaked and trembling. League rescuers took the dog to his home.

In the mad scramble to reach the standed dog, a little girl cut her nose on a barbed-wire fence. And when the excitement had died down a boy who had formed part of the bicycle escort found that somebody else had made off with his bike.

Barnes, who for 51 years has run a truck farm at the Dana place address, said Trixie's predicament was due to old age and rheumatism. He added that he planned to have the dog destroyed this morning.

Trixie will be buried on the hillside where he spent his life since he was taken there in Barnes' overcoat pocket 16 years ago. Not much is known of his ancestry.

"He's part collie and part something else," said Barnes.

Pupils Return To Class Today After Holiday

School Officials Forecast Record Will Be Set in Enrollment.

Back after the first holiday of the school year—a day off to enable them to view yesterday's G. A. R. parade—Washington's school boys and girls will begin their new school term in earnest this morning.

School officals, believing that many parents kept their children from school until after the holiday, look to a new record enrollment.

After two days of school there were 88,571 pupils in school, the statistician's office reported, after receiving attendance figures for Tuesday. This enrollment showed a gain of 4,038 over that of the first day, Monday.

The increase over the second day of school last year, however, was only 920, a gain much smaller than officials predicted would be registered.

In addition to yesterday's holiday, the Jewish holidays, now being observed, have contributed to the delay in school enrollment, officials said.

Acute overcrowding exists in several sections of the city, raising particularly severe problems in the 13 one-room portable buildings still in use.

A new addition at Randall school is near completion and will relieve the situation existing in the two portables located there.

Clara Bristow, 18, Sought by Police

Detectives of the public relations squad yesterday began a search for 18-year-old Clara Bristow, granddaughter of Joseph Little Bristow, former Senator from Kansas, reported missing from her home, 635 F street southwest, since Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Augusta Downs, grandmother of the girl, told police she received a letter from Clara yesterday saying she was "tired of school" and was going to get a job. The letter carried a Washington postmark.

Sophs Dub American U. Frosh Knights of the Gartered Sock

For the big, bad, bold sophomores, led by husky Kimber Shoop, of Shamokin, Pa., a football player who also is chairman of the freshman rules committee, have passed a rule barring garterless socks for first-year students.

First formal inspection of the freshmen, to determine whether they are obeying the rule, which, it was pointed out, is quite "elastic," will take place on the campus today at noon.

Shoop and his committee, backed by all the classes and the student council, will move up and down among the freshmen like officers inspecting recruits.

Socks must be black, and the freshmen also must wear orange-blue caps with bills and large green bow ties.

Amid the honky-tonk of freshmen rules and regulations and the business of getting down to work for the academic year, students yesterday were addressed by Dr. Joseph M. M. Gray, chancellor of the university.

Dr. Gray warned against "softness" and "taking the most convenient way" in college life.

"You will have little regret over whatever hardness you shall have met," said Dr. Gray.

"You will, however, have an inexorable remorse for every surrender of your best selves to the softness that betrayed you into mediocrity of mind and spirit."

He spoke at convocation at Metropolitan Church, adjacent to the campus.

Classes began last night at the downtown center of the university, the Graduate School and the School of Public Affairs. They will open today in the College of Liberal Arts.

U. S. Seeking Monastery Kidnap Clew

The solution to the kidnaping of 20-month-old Harry Browe in Detroit, September 5, may be found in the visitors' register of the Franciscan Monastery here, it was learned yesterday.

Department of Justice agents now are examining visitors' records dating back to 1929, hoping to find in them the same handwriting that appeared on a note received by the baby's parents September 12. The note was written on the back of a torn picture postcard of a type that can be obtained at the monastery. It read:

"Mrs. Browe, please forgive me for taking your baby. You cannot understand how it is to be without one. You have so many, surely you can spare this one. He is beginning to like us and we want you to know * * *"

It was said at the monastery yesterday that this particular type of postcard was not available there until September, 1929. Since that time about 10,000 have been sold. The supply ran out some months ago and was not reordered.

Monastery officials also said that between 125,000 and 150,000 persons visit the shrine annually. Only about one in ten of these sign the register, they added.

Department of Justice men, working on the theory that the kidnaper may have been one of those to sign, now are scrutinizing the approximately 100,000 names in the seven-year record. The records were turned over to them September 16.

Real Estate Taxes To Rise $190,000

Washington home owners and investors will pay $190,339 more in real estate taxes this year than during the previous fiscal year, Tax Assessor Fred D. Allen disclosed yesterday.

Compiling data for the fiscal relations study being conducted by J. L. Jacobs, Chicago expert, Allen showed that the assessed value of real estate has increased $12,658,769 over the total for the fiscal year 1936.

The increase in taxable property values, however, fell far short of the jump in valuation of Federal tax-exempt properties. The latter rose $84,335,560 to $657,081,505.

This increase was due chiefly to completion of several of the larger buildings in the Federal Triangle.

Beneficiary's Right To Contest Divorce Decree Challenged

The question whether a divorce decree can be challenged by one receiving benefits from it while still challenging its legality was raised in District Court yesterday, when attorneys Jean M. Boardman and S. J. McCathran moved for dismissal of an appeal by Mrs. Frances C. Harris.

The attorneys explained that the husband, David E. Harris, obtained a divorce here last fall. The decree required that he pay his wife $30 monthly. Since then, he said, he has maintained the payments, although his wife is contesting the validity of the decree upon which the payments were based.

The question now presented is whether the wife can continue to receive the decreed payments and at the same time question the legality of the decree under which they were ordered.

June Elopement Of Narcissa Fox Is Revealed Here

Walking into the family living room several days ago Miss Narcissa Ann Fox, 21, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McDill Fox, 5454 Thirtieth street northwest, announced she has been wed to John Otis Hally, 27, of Denver, since June 6.

After the excitement had quieted down explanations started. Mrs. Hally said she and her husband had slipped off to Falls Church with the bride's sister, Elinor, and were quietly married in St. James' Catholic Church.

Mrs. Hally is a graduate of Immaculata Seminary here. Mr. Hally attended Regis University, in Denver, and was awarded a Mullen scholarship to Catholic University. He was graduated in law and became a member of the District bar in 1935. He is employed at the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Mr. Fox, who is now a senior attorney for the Securities and Exchange Commission, formerly was dean of the law school at Catholic University. He came here from Milwaukee more than five years ago.

Bending an elbow to a plate of frankfurters and beans (the Zoo restaurant's specialty), Dr. August Krogh, Nobel Prize winner and international authority on the respiration of insects, was loath to talk shop yesterday.

Dr. Krogh is Denmark's leading biological scientist. He is one of the few men of science who were selected to read papers at the scholars' conference held at Harvard this month in connection with the university's tercentenary. For his work in physiology and medicine he received the Nobel Prize in 1920.

But yesterday he was content to get away from it all, to forget his degree and his Copenhagen students and his frog-filled laboratory and have a good time wrestling hot dogs and following Director William M. Mann on a tour of the Zoo.

"Is it true," the Danish savant was asked, "that you weigh the breath of insects in the course of your experiments to determine the amount of gains and losses in their body weight?"

Dr. Krogh, who is 62 but looks 10 years younger, laughed heartily at the nontechnical description of a highly technical endeavor, but admitted it was approximately correct. At present, however, he is concerned chiefly with the effect of "heavy water" on animals. In his Copenhagen experiments he uses frogs, rats and mice.

He'd like to know, for one thing, why "heavy water," a discovery of the last few years, is poisonous to animal life. Solution of the mystery will not necessarily bring any practical uses, but Dr. Krogh doesn't care about that.

This is his third visit to the United States. He has light whiskers, a hearty laugh and a profound respect for Danish beer. The latter is mostly due to the fact that Copenhagen's big brewer, G. C. Jacobson, contributes surplus profits to the Danish Royal Society for scientific research.

Mrs. Krogh is traveling with the doctor.

Planning Unit Meets Today; To Study Dike

Proposal to Fill in Bay at Airport Also to Be Considered.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission will meet today for the first time since July to make decisions and recommendations on a proposed flood levee in West Potomac Park, parkway development, feasibility of filling in Boundary Channel Bay opposite Washington Airport and other items.

Chairman Frederick A. Delano will preside over the two-day meeting. A field trip is scheduled for this afternoon to the downtown levee site urged by Army engineers and to the Leiter estate, on the Potomac, above Chain Bridge, which has been donated to the Federal Government for recreational use.

At this morning's session the planners will consider the suggestion of an Arlington County citizen that the original boundary stones which divided Virginia from the District be preserved in Federal custody. Though many of the markers, which were set out by Maj. L'Enfant, have vanished or been destroyed, a number of them still are used to bound Arlington and Fairfax Counties.

Tomorrow, following the inspection tour, the commission will decide whether it is to concur in the Army's recommendations of a dyke on the line of Independence avenue or reaffirm its previous stand, which is that the present dyke which extends along the north grounds of Washington Monument and behind the Navy and Munitions buildings is adequate.

Proposed changes in the opening and closing hours of Government buildings and schools, progress of the Lee boulevard development and studies for an extra span in Key Bridge to permit juncture of the George Washington Memorial highway with Rosslyn plaza also will be discussed.

Max Gordon's Opening Starts Drama Season

Foremost Producer Starts Season With Play on Napoleon's Life.

From the evidence of earlier seasons it may reasonably be deduced that the opening of the new year by living drama at the National Theater next Monday night may be attended by all of the propitious muses. One draws this conclusion from the fact that Max Gordon is sponsor of the occasion and that the play is the American premiere of "St. Helena," a story of the later years of Napoleon in which the principal role will be played by Maurice Evans, remembered for his Romeo to Miss Katharine Cornell's Juliet in the stage version of the Shakespeare tragedy seen at the National last season. Max Gordon, it will be recalled, was the producer of "The Farmer Takes a Wife," "Pride and Prejudice" and other plays that have set box-office standards at which rival producers have been induced to shoot. A typical Gordon cast will support the star in this new play. The usual matinees will be presented on Wednesday and Saturday.

"The Texas Rangers" is the title of the film play to be presented as chief feature of the bill at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater next week, beginning tomorrow. The stellar roles are played by Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie and Jean Parker, most charming of the younger ingenues currently decorating the native cinema.

On the stage, a favorite screen star, Leo Carrillo will appear in person, presenting a new fund of stories, offered in his inimitable fashion. Others on the program will include the Cappy Barry Harmonica Swing Ensemble; Jeanne, Jack and Joe, in "Smile Service," and the Five DeGuchis, masterful exponents of risley and tumbling.

The last entertainment week in September will bring the first Maj. Bowes Dance Band and all-star revue to the Loew's Capitol stage starting tomorrow, as well as the new screen comedy romance, "My American Wife," with a cast that includes Francis Lederer, Ann Sothern, Fred Stone and Billie Burks.

"My American Wife" is a breezy and blithe romantic story of a titled nobleman who marries an American girl and then sets about proving that he's a better American than even the natives, and a better cowboy than Arizona's best cowhands.

Maj. Bowes' Dance Band of 21 talented professional musicians will be directed by handsome Ted Mack, who is to be seen in the M-G-M screen version of "The Great Ziegfeld." In addition to presenting some novel musical arrangements of their own the Bowes bandsmen will form the musical background for an all-star revue of a dozen of the major's blue ribbon winners.

The combination of one of the most widely discussed novels of our day, an internationally famous actor, and a top-ranking director, made the Gaumont-British production, "Power," which is being revived by the Little Theater the week beginning Thursday, September 24, one of the outstanding productions of 1934.

Seven separate stories are woven together in the plot of "Friday the Thirteenth," the latest starring vehicle for Jessie Matthews to come to Washington, now playing at the Belasco Theater.

The scene is a bus. The time is just before midnight on Friday the thirteenth—but it might just as well be any other time of the day or any other time of the week or month, so true to life are the people and their stories. On the bus, besides the crew (who also have their story to tell), are a crook, a timid husband, a travel agency clerk, a wealthy wife, a vaudeville danseuse and a street salesman.

Why they all happened to be riding that particular bus and what happens as the result of the crash furnishes the story material, with love and hate, romance and adventure, comedy and tragedy all present to make for complete entertainment.

They're dusting off the organ down at the Rialto preparatory to offering Washingtonians an almost forgotten feature of picture presentation, the organ interludes. When the Rialto opens this Saturday night with the guest performance of "Grand Hotel," the audience will be ushered in to the strains of such favorite organ numbers as "The Blue Danube," "Sweet Mystery of Life," and "Indian Love Call."

With brilliant acting performances from such screen headliners as Joan Crawford, Robert Taylor, Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Melvyn Douglas and James Stewart, "The Gorgeous Hussy" returns to Loew's Columbia Friday, making the fourth week on F street for this popular film, having just finished three weeks at the Palace.

"The Great Ziegfeld," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's giant musical extravaganza, which is said to dwarf anything of its kind ever filmed, will definitely open at Loew's Palace this Friday, it was announced yesterday.

For three solid hours this film unfolds heart-throbbing drama merged with scenes of songs, dances, rhythm and a veritable parade of many of the most popular stars in the world of screen, stage, radio and musical comedy.

As in the past with their preceding pictures the new Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers "Swing Time" goes into a fourth week at RKO-Keith's tomorrow. This picture, with its Jerome Kern melodies and the three comedians, Helen Broderick, Victor Moore and Eric Blore to aid and abet the Astaire-Rogers combination is piling up many records at the Fifteenth street theater, the attendance topping all their previous pictures with the exception of "Top Hat."

The Gayety's attraction for the coming week will be none other than Washington's own comedian, the inimitable Billy (Cheese and Crackers) Hagen, and his own great burlesque company.

In 'Texas Rangers,' on Earle Tap

Fred MacMurray and Jean Parker, shown above, are entrusted with the romantic obligations of "The Texas Rangers," the screen portion of the new Earle bill, which will include, on the stage, Leo Carrillo, that gay caballero, and other acts.

Hollywood's Film Folks

By Sidney Skolsky.

Tintypes.

Hollywood, Sept. 23.

Jerome Kern became a song writer because he didn't like the popular songs of his day. He was a song plugger, and he didn't believe the songs he had to sell were any good.

He decided to write better popular music. He has written, among many others, "Old Man River," "Who?" "I've Told Every Little Star," "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" and—name your own favorite. He has written better popular music, in fact, the best.

He was born in New York City on January 27, 1885. He took piano lessons when a child and liked them. He went to Germany to study music. His first song hit was a ditty called "How'd You Like to Spoon With Me?"

He is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 146 pounds, has thin gray hair and pointed hazel eyes. He is very formal. When he gets furious he becomes silent.

He never wears a necktie. Instead, he wears a large, square scarf, generally a bright color, which he ties the same as a necktie. He buys white linen trousers and dyes them different colors. His favorite color, even for the trousers, is green.

He is a well-read and well-informed man. He likes discussions and will sit and talk for hours. He is fond of food and his biggest meal is breakfast. He doesn't care for liquor and has to force himself to take a drink.

He is married to Eva Leale. They were married in England in 1910. They have one daughter, Betty, 18, a charming girl who calls her father Old Man River.

* * * *

Writing a song, he generally composes the music first and has the lyricist fit the words to his music. He works both ways, though.

Of his own compositions his favorite is "Old Man River." He really gets annoyed when his lyric writer is neglected in the mention of a Kern song. He believes Oscar Hammerstein deserves as much credit for "Old Man River" as he does.

He would like to play golf but can't because his hands blister. His hands are very sensitive. He doesn't wear any jewelry.

He has never been on the radio. He has never been on the stage. He is a bad demonstrator of his own songs, although he used to be a song plugger at Wanamaker's. He believes people don't like to hear him play the piano, but will play if you convince him you're interested.

* * * *

He has a great love for the fine books and rare books. He was one of the foremost book collectors in the country. During the depression he sold his valuable collection for a fortune. The day after the auction he passed a bookstore, saw a rare book, went in and bought it with some of the auction money.

* * * *

Culbertson On Bridge

Worst Played Hand of Year.

In these enlightened days when every club, every social gathering indeed, has its full quota of contract experts, it is no novelty to see a well-played hand. And I confidently look forward to the day when the average player (probably a member of the next generation of players, now matriculating at college) will look upon a Vienna coup as a simple little play to be taken in one's stride, hardly more exciting than a finesse.

But until that time, fortunately for our need of humility, we won't have to fear the boredom that comes with perfection. To witness that statement, allow me to present the worst played hand of the year.

Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 spade	2 clubs	3 diam.	Pass
3 spades	Pass	4 spades	Pass
Pass	Pass

North's jump bid in diamonds was better than a double raise of partner's suit because it gave a mild slam-try at a convenient stage. Had North bid three spades and South four, North would have been embarrassed on his next turn, the question being whether to pass or go past the game level with an asking bid or other type of slam-try.

West didn't like the sound of the bidding very much. It appeared to him that it would take a miracle to defeat the contract. Almost haphazardly, he opened the ace of clubs (and it turned out to be a wonderful choice).

In my opinion, West should have shifted to a low heart at the second lead, with the prayer that declarer lacked the queen and would guess wrong. Not that he should guess wrong; after the two club vulnerable overcall, dummy's king should be put up without a second's hesitation. But perhaps West knew the declarer better than I do, for at the second lead he led a low club.

The miracle happened! Declarer saw a chance to get rid of both of dummy's hearts and thus to make two overtricks, so he gayly discarded the heart jack from dummy, expecting to win the trick in his own hand. But East just as gayly tossed on the deuce of trumps! That was the beginning of the end. East put West on lead with the heart ace and another club came back. Desperately, now, declarer used one of dummy's trumps, praying that the queen was in West's hand. To the everlasting credit of justice, however (considering the hash declarer had made of an ironclad contract), East overuffed for the fourth and setting trick.

Even without West's vulnerable club overcall, elementary safety methods should have been used against the second club lead. North and South had between them every high trump except the queen. Ruffing the second club in dummy would have guaranteed that East could not twice overruff and would have insured the contract, except against the remote (and uninsurable) chance that West was void of diamonds. It took positive genius to be defeated on this hand, after the first two leads; hence the title of the article.

The Post's New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons.

Sam Harris met Ben Hecht last night and revealed some unpublished facts concerning the day when he produced Hecht's "Man-Eating Tiger." At the second show, after the critics already had spread their sad messages, Harris came to the theater and learned that there was only one customer in the orchestra. "Refund his money and call off the performance," he instructed the box-office man. "Buy him a box of cigars as an inducement" . . . Sam entered the theater and discovered that the curtain already was up. He seated himself next to the lone customer, began his spiel and then—from somewhere high in the balcony—came the shout: "This is a lousy show!" . . . Harris raced up the aisle to catch his departing box-office man. "You'd better," he ordered, "make that two boxes of cigars!"

* * * *

Leon and Eddie, the night club impresarios, also are feuding secretly and putting up an amicable front. Offstage they aren't speaking to each other. Even if they did, they couldn't hear it—for both are suffering from ear trouble . . . A souse bumped into Ernest Boyd and Monty Woolly last night and wanted to start an argument. But he took one look at their beards and ran—shouting: "Jeez, ball players!" . . . That $500 Mexican bill now hanging in the Gay Nineties Bar was presented to the proprietor by a deposed President of Mexico. He offered the bill "as a good-luck charm" . . . Broadway's newest ironic note: The House of Morgan, the capitalistic-named cafe which went broke, is being converted now—into a Russian night spot.

Lou Brecker, the proprietor of Roseland, who sold out his interest in the Hollywood restaurant to Joe Moss, will be Moss' partner in the new Criterion Theater cafe venture. Arthur Loew also has an interest in the deal . . . Angelo Herndon will have his autobiography published by Random House, in January . . . Anatole Friedland is out of the hospital after a long siege and is now at Atlantic City's Ritz-Carlton . . . The French Casino girls, just imported from Europe, received instructions from their employer as to the evils of the Big City. "Above all," he cautioned, "keep away from phonies." The girls now are confused, for they don't know what a phony is. At the Kit Kat Klub Sunday night they were introduced to Mike Romanoff, and related their troubles. "Don't believe it," he advised them. "A phony is an American hero!"

The winners of the contest recently conducted, via newspaper ads, by Ken Murray to find stooges to work with him on his Lifebuoy broadcasts, really are second choices. Two young ladies were selected first, and presented to the sponsors—who rejected them because both had B. O. . . . Gypsy Rose Lee, who elevated herself from a Minsky strip-tease dancer to a featured spot in the Ziegfeld Follies, earns only one-third as much in this new job . . . Dick Keane, the former juvenile star who left the stage to become an agent, went to Larry Schwab to get a job for one of his clients in the new Schwab show. P. S.—Keane got the job, but for himself . . . Jesse Livermore, who made a fortune by predicting and selling short during the '20 market smash, now is spending his time getting numerological readings . . . Cal Tinney told his neighbor-rancher in Oklahoma: "I'm not accusing you of rustling. But please don't leave your hot branding irons lying around where my cattle fall on 'em."

Suspect Detained In Peddler Slaying

"Lefty" John Shepherd, 40-year-old newspaper and candy peddler, who died in Casualty Hospital from stab wounds September 16, met his death "at the hands of a party or parties unknown," a coroner's jury decided yesterday.

Shepherd was found unconscious in an abandoned parking lot at Seventh street and Constitution avenue northwest about 11 p. m., September 15.

Detective Sergt. Walter Beck, of the homicide squad, broadcast a lookout yesterday for three men, all described as hatless and wearing dirty clothes.

CHAPTER 24.

Sick With Dismay.

Pam turned quickly to see Mal coming toward her around a bend in an adjoining walk. His face, strained and anxious, lighted with something of the radiance of the evening as he saw her, while the intensity of his dark eyes began the familiar business of searchingly reading her face.

"Pam, darling, where have you been? I've hunted—I didn't misunderstand you to say you'd meet me down there at the gate?"

"I couldn't," was all Pamella dared manage.

"You couldn't?"

"I saw you waiting, Mal, but——"

"Would you mind leaving it unsaid, Pamella?"

The light in his eyes died out into a dullness that matched the sudden dullness of his voice. He looked away from her.

"I understand."

"No, Mal—for the very first time you don't!"

He went on refusing to look at her.

"It's just exactly what I needed to keep me from upsetting you with some very dreary business—to halt my preposterous hopes . . . Just as well, too, that we can't discuss this further. See, here comes an interruption.

Sick with dismay, Pam saw those two pests rushing toward them.

"That's impossible, David."

"Meaning what?"

"Meaning that I'm very fond of Ellen, and if she wants my friendship she shall have it until she herself tells me 'to leave her alone,' as you say."

"Now, David, will you shut up?" Ellen said hotly. "And I'll thank you to stop interfering with me and my friends."

Started With a Joke.

"I'll have you know, David, that it's made me very happy that Mr. Mallard wanted my friendship enough to single me out of a whole ballroom of women——"

"It's about time you quit hugging that nonsense to your little gullible breast," David ripped in angrily. "If you want to know, it all started with a joke—a joke I cooked up to play on you. Hank and Skeeter and I talked it over in the dressing room and figured it out afterward that Malard was there and overheard us. He never would have butted into our party except——"

"Just a moment, David," Mal interrupted after a quick look at Ellen's pale face. "It's true, Ellen, that I overheard plans for a prank in which my name was going to be made free with. But I had already seen you and Pamella in the lobby and wanted very much to meet you both. So I took advantage of David's joke to help myself out a little. . . . Come on. Let's go. This is all pretty foolish——"

"Do you think it foolish, after having compromised one woman I'm devoted to, to begin on a girl like Ellen?"

"No, Pam. It's David's turn to tell me what he's meaning."

Mal's amusement had disappeared. In fact, the look on his face gave even furious David to pause. But having started, he was determined to say it out.

"I mean there was a big rumpus about a kidnaping over your disappearance the night you passed out in Pam's house. Guess your man can tell you more about it than anybody. It was plastered all over the papers and then given out you were spending the holidays with 'friends.'"

"Why wasn't I told of this?" Mal demanded, white with anger.

"Because it didn't amount to a thing," Pam said insistently, "and you were too ill——"

"Yes, your friend Mr. Glenford didn't want you bothered with it," David put in. "He didn't seem to think about what all Pam's friends, not to mention the man in the street, might be thinking and saying."

Mal stood staring at David as if staring down a vista from the dark recesses of which he saw very alarming things approaching.

"I'm sorry, Pamella," he said with difficulty. "I'm sorry . . . I didn't know. There are circumstances that make it——"

"Oh, Mal——" Pam's voice failed her. "Don't let a jealous boy spoil the beautiful things we've—we've had together! . . . David, I don't think I can forgive you even if you apologize."

Smiles at Pam.

Mal smiled down at Pamella in a way that made her heart turn cold within her, so definitely did it seem a smile of farewell.

"Nothing can ever spoil what I've had these last months, Pam . . . Thank you, David, for telling me what I should have known from the first. You were a bit roughshod. But I can see you felt justified. And, Ellen, here's my handkerchief, if you'll promise to wipe away your last tear . . . Shall we go home—go back now, and try not let my—my unfortunate affairs spoil a day otherwise quite perfect?"

The Mallard car reached Villa Far Niente in the starlit darkness of the evening. The trip back hadn't been as impossible as Pam had feared. Mal was to be thanked for that. In his skilled way he succeeded in diverting his guests despite their upset emotions. But when the car drew up under the lights of her entrance and Mal stepped down to help them out Pam's heart ached to see how exhausted his face looked.

Mal stopped Ellen as she was crossing the hall to join David, who had brought up his car from the garage to take her home.

"I—I'm sorry, Mr. Mallard. Guess I sort of lost my head——"

"I did too, David. From the start. Think nothing more of it . . . Perhaps some steady work would make you happiest right now. If you're interested I can introduce you at the studio. We'll talk it over soon."

"Gosh!" David exclaimed. "I call that handsome!"

"Good luck!" Mal smiled.

"Ruben, I'll not be down for dinner. I don't want any. Please tell Miss Pam."

"I'll bring you up a tray, Mr. Mal," Ruben said.

"Oh, Mr. Mal," Ruben called after him. "A lady done kep' phonin' you most all afternoon. 'Peared like she was mighty disturbed caise she couldn't talk to you. I kep' tellin' her you wasn't here, like you tole me to tell folks. But a letter come for you a little while ago by messenger. I put it on your desk."

Emma Eames, 71, On Visit to U. S.

"Now I'm an old lady," the once famous prima donna laughed today. "I find it delightful to be old, and to have nothing expected of you."

Hubbell Wins 26th to Lead Hurlers

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Sept. 23.—The New York Giants' pitching master, Carl Hubbell, completed the best victory record in the major leagues in two years today by hurling his sixteenth straight win, a 5-to-4 decision over the Phillies.

The triumph brought the Giants to within an eyelash of the National League pennant, assuring them of at least a tie for the title, and leaving them in a position where one victory for themselves or one defeat for the second-place Cardinals means the flag.

Hubbell's victory streak was the first 16-game run in the big time since Schoolboy Rowe hurled the Tigers into the American League pennant in 1934. It was "King Carl's" twenty-sixth win of the season against six defeats.

He was the complete master of the Phils through seven innings, but in the eighth and ninth got into enough trouble to put his streak on the fire until Travis Jackson threw out Jose Gomez for the final out.

The Phils landed on him for three runs in the eighth and Dolph Camilli's homer in the ninth, and had a man on base with only one out in the final frame, to give Hubbell as much trouble keeping on his streak since it began in mid-July.

With the Cardinals idle today, the win boosted the Giants' lead to five full games over the second-placers, and completely eliminated the Chicago Cubs from all mathematical possibility as a contender for the flag they won a year ago.

100 Swimmers To Vie in Meet Tonight

More than 100 entries are expected in the President's Cup Regatta Swim Meet which opens Washington's annual water carnival at The Shoreham Hotel Pool at 8 o'clock tonight.

Among the prominent water stars who will compete are Otto Schaffhauser and Dorothy Lubin, both from the Broadwood Swimming Club of Philadelphia.

Schaffhauser, former holder of the 50-yard record, will be a prominent contender for top honors in the 100-yard free-style swim. Dorothy Lubin, National Interscholastic 50-yard champion last year, is expected to furnish some good competition in the 100-yard free style swim for women.

Margaret Hoffman, unattached, is highly favored in the breast stroke contest. A member of the 1932 Olympic team, Miss Hoffman did not compete in the 1936 Olympic trials because of lack of time to train and to make the trip to Berlin. With good opposition, which is promised, she will try to lower a record she established in the President's Cup meet last year when she covered 100 yards in 1:23 4-5.

The Penn A. C. will bring three outstanding swimmers in Dan Taggart, William Mackey and Fred Hoette. Mackey will compete in the medley and probably will be favored in the back stroke swim.

Philadelphia's Stadium to Be Biggest

By Bill McCormick,
A Staff Correspondent.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 23.—Everyone and everything connected with last night's slugging match here between Joe Louis and Al Ettore seems to have benefitted by the fight.

The city of Philadelphia, host to the brawl, perhaps benefitted the most as plans are under way to move the Jim Braddock-Max Schmeling fight next summer to the City of Brotherly Love.

Louis, Ettore, the promoters and everyone else connected with the successful fisticuffing venture have benefitted almost as much.

To help cash in on the favorable publicity about Philadelphia evoked by the laudable handling of the Louis-Ettore engagement, Mayor S. Davis Wilson today signed his approval for a WPA expenditure of $202,580 to increase the seating capacity of the Municipal Stadium where Joe belted out Al in the fifth round.

Stadium Is Signed For.

Immediately afterward, Promoters Mike Jacobs, of New York, and Herman Taylor, of Philadelphia, announced they had "tied up" the stadium for three years as far as boxing is concerned. They were co-promoters of last night's fight.

The project provides for increasing the stadium's seating capacity by 12,700, bringing the total number of seats to 100,000 for the Army-Navy football game to be held there November 28 and providing a seating capacity of 140,000 to 145,000 for fights. Thus Philadelphia will be provided with the largest boxing seating capacity in the United States as a result of the Louis-Ettore encounter.

Jacobs and Taylor also announced they had hooked up together for future boxing promotions in Philadelphia. They not only will try to shift the Braddock-Schmeling match here, but will try to match Louis with LeRoy Haynes or some other outstanding heavyweight in the Convention Hall here in the near future.

Buffalo Wins Cup In Minor Playoff

Nazi Olympic Stadium To Be Athletic Field

Berlin, Sept. 23 (U.P.).—The huge Reichsport Field, where the Olympic games were held, will be turned next spring into a mass athletic field under an agreement signed today between the organization, Power Through Joy, and the Reich Academy for Physical Culture.

Power Through Joy for over two years has been conducting physical culture courses chiefly aiming toward the Reich sport medal, given to any German capable of bettering a set of standard performances in several events, including gymnastics, track and field, and swimming.

Indians' Claim On Bob Feller Is Investigated

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 23.—The Cleveland News said today that Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis is investigating the right of the Cleveland Baseball Club to keep Bob Feller, the sensational rookie pitcher who holds the American League record for strikeouts in one game.

The News said that Lee Kayser, president of the Des Moines Club of the Western League, has demanded that Judge Landis declare Feller a free agent. The Indians bought Feller from the New Orleans Club, the newspaper said.

The claim of the Des Moines Club is that Feller never actually belonged to any club but the Indians and that Cleveland violated baseball rules by signing him directly from amateur ranks, the News said.

Browns Thump Tigers to End Streak

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Sept. 23.—The St. Louis Browns ended Detroit's 9-game winning streak and spoiled the champion Tigers' final home appearance of the season here today by battering four pitchers for a 10-to-1 victory. Ivy Paul Andrews held the Detroit batsmen to six hits.

Over the season the Tigers defeated the Browns 11 times and lost 10 games.

Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe was blasted from the Detroit pitching mound in the first inning as St. Louis pushed six runs across the plate. Vic Sorrell, Roxie Lawson and Red Phillips, who succeeded him, also were hit hard by the Browns whose attack was led by Harland Clift with two doubles and a triple.

Virginia Pope Defeated in Post Golf

By Dave Herman.

Virginia Pope's hopes of winning both the medal and title in The Washington Post match play handicap golf championship at Kenwood Golf and Country Club were blasted yesterday by a pretty 21-year-old brunette, Gloria Rodgers.

Miss Rodgers, who a few weeks ago returned to competitive golf after a three-year absence, defeated Miss Pope, 2 up, in the feature upset of the second-round matches.

That thrilling victory over the medalist and favorite sent Miss Rodgers into the quarterfinals along with Mrs. J. J. McCarthy, Mrs. Roland Mackenzie and Mrs. Harry A. Knox, of Congressional; Mrs. Leo Walper and Mrs. W. Thomas, of the host club; Mrs. C. P. Medley, of Manor and Mrs. A. W. Tucker, of Beaver Dam.

Wins on Last Hole.

Miss Rodgers had to go to the last hole before winning from her Kenwood chum. Having an 8 handicap, she was given one stroke by Miss Pope—that on the 531-yard thirteenth, where Miss Rodgers won the hole after they had halved in par fives.

It was nip-and-tuck all the way, Miss Pope winning the first two holes, only to watch Miss Rodgers cut that lead away with a three-hole splurge.

Even going to the ninth, Miss Pope reached the green in two mighty whacks and won with a four to a five to go one up.

At the fouteenth, Miss Pope got her par four to go one up, but she blew too many shots on the fifteenth as Miss Rodgers recovered nicely from a trap for her five and a win. Miss Rodgers sank an 8-footer for a par and win on the sixteenth to go one up, and they halved the seventeenth in fives, after Miss Rodgers actually four-putted the green.

Playing safe on the home hole, Miss Rodgers won with a five to Miss Pope's six.

Mrs. Walper Wins.

This morning at 9:30 Miss Rodgers faces Mrs. McCarthy, an 11 handicap golfer, who surprised by defeating Mrs. Howard Simons, of Manor, seven handicap entry, 3 and 2.

Mrs. Walper, Kenwood champion, who has a three handicap, gave away 11 strokes to Mrs. R. E. Kelly, of Beaver Dam, and won, 2 and 1, after being two down going to the thirteenth.

Forced to concede six strokes on the back nine, Mrs. Walper remarked, "I can't win unless I shoot close to par golf," and that is what she had to do to close out Mrs. Kelly on the seventeenth green. Mrs. Kelly, who made an heroic comeback yesterday to down Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, tired perceptibly along the stretch.

Mrs. Medley, 11 handicap, removed Mrs. George McGinty, of Columbia, 9 handicap, 5 and 4. Mrs. McGinty was a finalist last season.

Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor champion, with a 5 handicap, discovered that conceding Mrs. Tucker 9 strokes was too much of a handicap, and bowed out of the picture, 2 and 1, in another upset.

Championship Flight.

Gloria Rodgers (Kenwood), 8, defeated Virginia Pope (Kenwood), 1, by 2 up.

Mrs. J. J. McCarthy (Congressional), 11, defeated Mrs. Howard Simons (Manor), 7, by 3 and 2.

Mrs. Roland Mackenzie, 3, won by default.

Mrs. A. W. Tucker (Beaver Dam), 14, defeated Mrs. L. G. Pray (Manor), 5, by 2 and 1.

Consolations.

Mrs. George Goetzman (Congressional), 18, defeated Mrs. J. T. Powell (Manor), 10, by 2 and 1.

Mrs. A. B. Ashe (Army-Navy), 18, defeated Mrs. A. A. Morrill, 12, by 6 and 5.

Mrs. J. A. Marr (Columbia), 8, defeated Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts (Congressional), 14, 3 and 1.

Mrs. J. F. DeParges (Columbia), 17, won by default.

Mrs. J. Franklin Gross (Columbia), won by default.

Today's Pairings.

9:30—Miss Rodgers vs. Mrs. McCarthy.
9:35—Mrs. Walper vs. Mrs. Mackenzie.
9:50—Mrs. Medley vs. Mrs. Thomas.
9:25—Mrs. Knox vs. Mrs. Tucker.

Jenkins Sets 48-Hour Auto Speed Record

By the Associated Press.

Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, Sept. 23.—Ab Jenkins won the 48-hour world motor car speed record from Great Britain tonight after smashing a series of other marks in two days of driving over the Bonneville Salt Flats.

Aided by Relief Driver Babe Stapp, veteran Los Angeles race pilot, who twice escaped unscathed when tires were thrown, Jenkins averaged 148.626 miles an hour, far surpassing the old record of 136.34 miles an hour established by Capt. George Eyston, of Great Britain.

The triumph in the 7,134.082-mile grind marked the end of a big parade of speed and endurance records of lesser importance brought back to the United States.

The finish of the run that started Monday at 5:52.32 p. m. (8:52.32 Eastern standard time), came in a picturesque setting at dusk.

Misses Early Marks.

"Well," Jenkins said without a smile, "that's that!"

And then the tanned Utah driver announced that Saturday at dawn he would start a 13-hour run calculated to finish a clean sweep of world records by bagging the few marks for shorter distances missed as he took it easy in the early stages of the 48-hour run.

Stapp took the wheel early today and drove until nearly noon. Thereafter he and Jenkins alternated at two-hour intervals, the latter taking over at 4 o'clock for the final record-smashing run.

Braddock May List 3 Non-Title Contests

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 23.—The New York State Athletic Commission today gave Heavyweight Champion James J. Braddock permission to engage in two or three tune-up bouts prior to his postponed title go with Max Schmeling, probably next June.

Joe Gould, the champions manager, said he would try to line up a few four and six-round no-decision affairs, in which the title would not be involved, as soon as the arthritis for which Braddock is being treated, permits him to resume training.

Dr. Fred Albee, Jimmy's physician, wrote the commission the heavyweight king will be ready for hard work in another two months.

Permission for the tune-ups was granted on condition that Braddock post a $5,000 guarantee as evidence of his intention to accept Schmeling's challenge, already on file.

Perry Advances In Pacific Tennis

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Sept. 23.—Fred Perry, of England, moved another step toward his fourth Pacific Southwest tennis championship today by defeating formidable John McDiarmid, Chicago, Ill., 6—2, 6—4, in the quarter finals of the tournament.

Francis K. Shields, of Hollywood, former American Davis Cup star, likewise reached the semifinal round, eliminating Mort Ballagh, Los Angeles, 6—2, 6—2.

Shields and Perry, who won the Pacific Southwest title in 1932, 1933 and 1934, will meet Saturday in a semifinal round.

Werber Is Set For Last Out, Ball Hops

By Shirley Povich,
Sports Editor of The Post.

The clock whirled backward 12 years in the space of a split second yesterday, an innocent-looking ground ball off the bat of Ossie Bluege took a crazy hop past the reach of Third Baseman Bill Werber and the Nats beat the Red Sox even as they beat the Giants in that memorable World Series game in 1924.

By a score of 3 to 2 the Nats won the ball game, won it in the ninth inning with two out, by grace of the baseball gods and as cruel a break in the luck as any beaten ball team ever encountered.

Literally the Nats hopped into third place ahead of the faltering White Six, and reduced to two games the second-place margin of the Detroit Tigers.

Ball Takes Hop.

The tying run they had already pushed across in that ninth inning. Fritz Ostermueller, the second Boston pitcher of the inning, was valiantly attempting to stem the onslaught. He negotiated two outs while holding the winning run on third base. The bases were filled when Bluege arrived at bat.

Ostermueller was emerging as something of a hero. Especially after slipping a second strike past Bluege when a fourth ball would have forced in the winning run. The count was three and two when Bluege drove a meek grounder toward Werber. The Boston third baseman was set for an easy play, and then, horrors!

Some defect in the infield, or a pebble, perhaps, fiendishly announced its presence to frustrate the Red Sox. The ball caromed crazily to Werber's right 6 feet in front of his waiting glove. He did manage to reach it with his bare hand, far off balance, but too late to make a force play at third, and Ben Chap-

Bow and Arrow Beats Aneroid After Duel in Feature at Graw

Winner Has Won Total of $12,560

9,000 See Program; Fogarty Pays $15.50 in Last Event.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 23.—Candidates for Saturday's $10,000 added Potomac Handicap competed in the Fort McHenry purse, today's feature race, and the major portion of the money distribution went to E. R. Bradley's 3-year-old ace, Bow and Arrow. With Jockey Joe Renick depending upon hand riding, Bow and Arrow zoomed to the finish line with a length and a half margin over Edward Bruner's Aneroid with Mrs. W. W. Vaughn's Knight Warrior third and two and a half lengths away. Two Bob, from the C. V. Whitney barn and Mrs. R. A. Van Clief's Phantom Fox completed the field and would have been just as well off in their respective stalls.

The mile and 70 yards test was a two-horse affair between Bow and Arrow and Aneroid. From his No. 1 post position, Bow and Arrow bounded to the front at the break and had assumed a length lead over Aneroid as the group entered the backstretch. However, Aneroid moved up to be virtually abreast of the Bradleyite on the swing for the stretch and then took a slight lead. However, Jockey Renick began to throw his arms and legs and Bow and Arrow, hugging the rail, went on to win while Aneroid, under punishment, dropped slowly back. Knight Warrior was third all the way but never a threat.

Bow and Arrow Pays $3.60.

Bow and Arrow, the first Bradley horse to see action in Maryland this fall, won his third straight race,running the route in 1:43 1-5 and added $850 to his year's earning which now total $12,560. In the role of favorite, the colt paid a $3.60 mutuel.

The cerise and white of the Vanderbilt stable scored a popular victory in the first race before a midweek crowd of 9,000. The field of maiden 3-year-olds and upward contestants bowed before the speed of Saracen, a son of Sir Gallahad III. Ridden by Johnny Bejshak, he had a half length margin over Yenrac after running the 6 furlongs in 1:14 3-5 over a fast track. Passing Eve was a fast-closing third. Saracen was a $4.10 favorite and ran accordingly, taking the lead within the first furlong and holding sway thereafter.

Mary Keen, a recent graduate from the maiden class, won her second race of the year for the Bomar Stable in the second event for juveniles over the 6-furlong course to pay a $35.40 mutuel. The daughter of Victorian, excellently handled by Apprentice R. Morris, shook off Gay Balko to take the lead entering the final straightaway and was a length ahead of the stretch drive of A. C. Compton's Clingendaal at the wire. Mr. Canron closed a gap to be third in a field of eight. Mary Keen stepped the three-quarters in 1:13 1-5

Apprentice Morris rode his second straight winner of the day aboard Mrs. E. Denemark's My Surprise in the third race, to defeat, among others, Portden, the property of E. Kane.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SARACEN, $4.10, $3.50, $2.60; YENRAC, $18.70, $10.00; PASSING EVE, $3.50.

SARACEN, sent up on the inside to take command in the opening furlong, shook off challenge of CANARD nearing the far turn, and was kept to a stout drive to hold YENRAC safe thereafter. The latter, forwardly placed throughout, was closest to the pace the last half and finished willingly. PASSING EVE came with a belated rush in the final stages after being shuffled back soon after the start. STEP ASIDE, lacking early speed, came with good speed on the outside. CANARD had early speed. BENGAY came through on the rail with a sharp move in the early stretch and then faded.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:50½. Off at 2:56½. Winner, Bomar Stables' ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MARY KEEN, $35.40, $8.90, $4.80; CLINGENDAAL, $3.50, $3.20; MR. CANRON, $9.20.

MARY KEEN, steadied along while running with GAY BALKO, took command entering the stretch and easily held CLINGENDAAL safe in the closing drive. The latter, saving ground while close to the leaders, rallied willingly in the stretch, but could not menace the winner. MR. CANRON came with a rush on the inside in the last furlong. GREY COUNT raced evenly on the outside throughout. GAY BALKO quit under hustling tactics. BALKO'S MAID had some early speed.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:25½. Off at 3:29. Winner, Mrs. E. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MY SURPRISE, $9.20, $4.80, $3.40; PORTDEN, $5.30, $3.80; OLD FIELD, $9.00.

MY SURPRISE, steadied along while running in tight quarters for three furlongs, came through on the inside to challenge, were down PORTDEN in the stretch and was drawing out at the end. PORTDEN, rated just off the little pace for the early pace, saved ground entering the stretch and was going willingly at the finish. OLD FIELD, a trailer to the stretch, came with a belated rush on the outside and was going fastest at the close. ZOIC showed a good effort. GALON BOY tired after pressing the early pace of QUE GATO. PHILIPPI BOY closed courageously after a rough trip.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOW AND ARROW, $3.60, $2.30, $2.10; ANEROID, $2.70, $2.20; KNIGHT WARRIOR, $2.60.

BOW AND ARROW, hustled to the first turn, was rated along with ANEROID and under stout hand riding, held sway through the stretch. ANEROID, under slight restraint to the backstretch, took command briefly entering the stretch, but could not cope with the winner when placed to a drive. KNIGHT WARRIOR showed a good even effort but could not menace. TWO BOB and PHANTOM FOX were outclassed.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; handicap, Grade C. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, driving. Went to post at 4:31½. Off at 4:33. Winner, E. Kane's br. g. (4), by Broadside—Over the Moon. Trained by T. Malone. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:48 4-5, 1:13 3-5, 1:39 2-5, 1:46 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOON SIDE, $9.90, $5.20, $3.20; BROWN FEATHERS, $5.60, $3.50; MASTER LAD, $3.50.

MOON SIDE, quickest to begin, was hustled from the start and had to be ridden out to withstand closing rush of BROWN FEATHERS. The latter entered contention leaving the backstretch and placed on the outside for racing room, was closing on the winner at the end. MASTER LAD, close to the pace and running with BUCK LANGHORNE tired in the final furlong. The latter faltered suddenly. CHATMOSS dwelt suddenly at the break and closed with a belated rush. HAPPY DEAR closed some ground in the stretch.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:06. Off at 5:10. Winner, L. E. Ogle's ch. c. (4), by Pennant—Water Blossom. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:49, 1:14 2-5, 1:40 2-5, 1:43 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JIM JOHN, $5.70, $3.70, $2.60; ALICE BYRD, $4.10, $2.80; SOPHISTICATED, $3.60.

JIM JOHN, under slight restraint while alternating in setting and pressing the pace, went into definite command leaving the backstretch and easily held ALICE BYRD safe in the closing stages. The latter, hard ridden throughout, could not resist the winner. SOPHISTICATED went evenly behind the pace setters, but could not threaten. SUN ABBOT could not better his position after opening quarter. POLLY DEAR had some early speed. The others were always outrun.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:41. Off at 5:44. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FOGARTY, $15.50, $7.10, $3.50; EUDES (entry), $5.70, $3.20; SPARTAN LADY, $2.50.

FOGARTY, allowed to settle into best stride while trailing, began bettering position in the late backstretch, came around horses and disposed of EUDES in the final sixteenth. EUDES, rated along closest to the pace of MISS SNOW, took command leaving the backstretch but could not resist the winner. SPARTAN LADY came willingly at the end. MISS SNOW faltered after setting the pace.

G-Men Beat PWA, 2-1; Miller Drubs Pepco, 10-2, in Post Series

Morris Stars In Triumph Of Agents

He Drives In Winning Run, Saves Game on Several Occasions.

Giving one of the grandest exhibitions of infield play of his career, Walter Morris, former Georgetown University star and currently Bureau of Investigation's guardian of second base, yesterday led his mates to a thrilling 2-1 victory over PWA before a throng of 3,500 fans in The Washington Post Baseball Association championship play-off series.

Meanwhile on the opposite side of the Ellipse the Miller Furniture nine was blasting Pepco's championship dreams with a 12-hit attack that put the Electricians' dynamos out of commission for keeps. The score was 10-2.

PWA's defeat was its first in the titular series, but does not knock it out of the running. Tomorrow, at 4 p. m., on the North Ellipse, the team plays the Millers in a game that will decide the fate of one, for each has a defeat charged against it. Investigation also will be in action, opposing Procurement at the same hour on the South Ellipse.

Dusek to Meet Managoff on Mat Tonight

Rasslin a la rough house will be offered tonight at the Arena when Promoter Joe Turner will turn loose five bouts, starting at 8:30 p. m.

Featuring the card as the top rough-houser is none other than Ernie Dusek, one of the famous members of the Dusek "riot squad," who takes on Ivan Managoff, the personable Russian, in the main event with revenge as the motive.

In the semiwindup, Hans Kampher, a German of grappling note, will take on John Katan, another worthy who has made a lot of local friends.

Nats Beat Boston, 3-2, on Freak Hop

Pete Appleton thus won his duel with three Boston pitchers, the second Red Sox discard to hurl the Nats to victory in two days. Only six hits did Appleton surrender to his former pals, pitching one-hit ball through the last tense four innings.

Trailing, 2-1, entering that ninth, the Nats started out resolutely to tie the score. Pinch Hitter Buddy Lewis drew a walk from Jack Wilson, who had relieved young Emerson Poindexter, a Little Rock recruit, back in a seventh inning emergency. Ben Chapman bashed a terrific single through the box and Lewis moved to third. Jesse Hill drove a single to left and Lewis scored with the tying run as Chapman scampered to third.

The fast-wilting Wilson was relieved by Ostermueller as Kuhel appeared at bat and the Sox southpaw held Chapman on third, while Kuhel grounded harmlessly to Dahlgren. Johnny Stone he gave an intentional pass to fill the bases, and Freddie Sington he struck out to ease the tension considerably.

And then, along came Bluege, and grief for the Red Sox.

'Little World Series' Set To Start Friday Night

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 23 (AP).—George M. Trautman, president of the American Association, and a member of the three-man commission in charge of the "Little World Series," announced tonight that the annual classic between the Association and International League champions would start Friight night at Milwaukee, Wis.

Games will be played in Milwaukee, Association champion, Friday and Saturday night, and Sunday afternoon, and then the teams will move to Buffalo or Baltimore, depending on which wins the International play-off.

Cardinals' Goal-Kicking Star

FRANK CAIRO,

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

The die-hards who still belittle the fistic abilities of Joe Louis are popping that old question which always haunted Dempsey's admirers, namely and to wit:

"Who did he ever beat?"

POVICH.

It gives cause for pause, even as Dempsey's followers used to fumble for an answer even while convinced that the old Manassa Mauler was the most potent package that ever crawled through the ropes of a prize ring.

For the life of 'em they couldn't name one single great fighter Dempsey had beaten along his path to the title, or even afterward. Willard had been an oversized bum. Fred Fulton had a glass jaw. Billy Miske was something of a ham. Bill Brennan was just a tough guy with neither skill nor ambition. Georges Carpentier was the fragile orchid man. Luis Firpo was an aimless ox.

Truly there wasn't an admittedly great fighter in the lot. The bulk of fandom, however, was willing to regard Dempsey as a super fighter and let it go at that. He beat the best of his time and his followers didn't deem it necessary to analyze beyond that.

Well, now there's Joe Louis. He could knock out Lee Ramage in two rounds, Primo Carnera in six; he could stop King Levinsky in one; he could knock Baer kicking in four, Uzcudun in four, Retzlaff in one, Sharkey in three and Ettore in five. Yet they are still popping that question, "Who did he ever beat?"

There was, of course, that slight incident of Louis' knockout by Schmeling, but the Detroit Negro has beaten the best of his time with that one exception. And Dempsey, you remember, was knocked kicking by Fireman Jim Flynn.

Who, with the exception of Schmeling and Braddock, is there left for Louis to beat? One year before he kayoed Max Baer, Baer was hailed as the new super-man of the prize ring. Primo Carnera had been the world champion two years before. Louis has not evaded a single fight. But perhaps his record needs the embellishment of passing years that unfailingly gives to a fighter's past the glamour that is not ascribed to him in his heyday.

Ten years after his retirement, Dempsey's record in the ring has taken on that added glamour. The passing years have made him a legendary figure even among those who were not ready to pronounce him great in his fighting days. By the same token, Jack Johnson is always listed among the greats of the prize ring but in his salad days they could ask of his supporters the same question: "Who did he ever beat?"

Johnson, be it remembered, won the title from Tommy Burns who owned only a synthetic claim to the crown which had been handed to Marvin Hart by the retiring Jim Jeffries. True, he later beat Jeffries, but Big Jeff then had come out of three years' retirement—no fit physical specimen. It was Jeffries' woeful performance in that ring in Reno on July 4, 1910, that gave to the prize ring its worn-out descriptive "hollow shell."

Johnson knocked out Stanley Ketchell, of course, but what was Ketchell but an oversized middleweight? Yet years later there is hardly a dissenter when Johnson, who could lose to Jess Willard, is ranked among the all-time greats of the prize ring. Perhaps retirement to the fistic shadows holds for Joe Louis the full realization of his true fame.

Cards Uncover Place-Kicker In Cairo

19-Year-Old Tackle Due to See Plenty of Action Because of Ability.

It may sound like a bit of high-powered proselyting, but Catholic University went all the way to Italy for a first-rate placement kicker in getting Frank Cairo, husky 19-year-old tackle, who may kick the Cardinals to more than one victory this season.

Sawing on a second-string fiddle at this writing, Cairo, a sophomore, is headed for bigger and better things when he gets onto Bergman's methods of playing his position. But whether or not he plays regularly or as a substitute, the boy probably will be used frequently as a place-kicker, especially in booting points-after touchdowns.

Cairo was born in the village of Cosliume, Italy, son of a husky farmer, and at the tender age of 8 years was involuntarily transported to the United States and transplanted in the coal-mining and manufacturing section of Pennsylvania. An older brother, since dead, who wanted to be a physician, played an important role in inducing the family to come to this country, and the move has not been regretted.

Won All-State Honors.

Frank played four years of football with the Steelton High School team, where he won all-State honors. He kicked a 30-yard field goal against Williamsport in 1934 that won the game, 3-0, and the Central Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association championship, and the year previous to that kicked 30 points-after and field goals in as many tries. Steelton produced a champion in 1933, too.

Walter Young, American University coach, saw young Cairo in action and pronounced him the finest schoolboy prospect he had ever seen.

"It will take a great tackle to keep that boy off any college team," Young is quoted as saying, which, inasmuch as the boy is performing with the second club, gives you an idea of Catholic's strength.

Cairo, incidentally, made good on 58 of 61 attempted placements during his high school career, which gives you a fair idea of his ability.

Scuffle Shows Terp, Colonial Weak Spots

George Washington and Maryland joined forces again yesterday in a last-ditch attempt to perfect their armament for the opening games scheduled over the week-end, and the awful truths that Maryland's line isn't what it is cracked up to be and that George Washington's pass defense needs repairing again were apparent.

It may be that Maryland has an extraordinarily good passing attack this year, for it completed 11 consecutive forwards yesterday, or looking at it the other way, it may be that George Washington's aerial defense is extraordinarily weak. To the unbiased observer it looks like a little of each.

Coleman Headley and Charlev Weidinger were on the dispatching end of the Terp passes, with Vic Willis usually on the receiving side, and this triumvirate accounted for large gains throughout the afternoon. The Colonial backs seemed unable to co-ordinate their defense to meet the situation and much time and work will be devoted to remedying this defect.

New Passer Found.

George Washington, on the other hand, pierced Maryland's forward wall for consistent gains, traveling the length of the field using only straight football. But the Colonials used passes, too, and Coach Jim Pixlee uncovered a new prospect in Kingston Burnham, 150-pounder, who throws a fast and accurate ball. He threw four to "Nig" Tihila which would have gone for touchdowns in any game.

The line-up for tomorrow night's curtain-raiser with Emory-Henry will not be determined until after practice today, so unsettled is the situation. Capt. Frank Kavalier, center, appears to be the only one sure of his position.

Music tomorrow night will be supplied by the Police Boys Band, a 70-piece outfit, and there will be fireworks between the halves as well as during the game.

Grid Game Canceled.

The Virginia A. C., 150-pound Northern Virginia champions, is canceling a scheduled game with the Northeast Boys Club Sunday because of a contest with the Washington Cardinals in Baggett's Stadium at 10:30 a. m.

Shea Wins Medal At Congressional

Billy Shea, 18-year-old golf star, shot a 71, one under par, yesterday to win the medal in the qualifying round of the Congressional Country Club championship.

Shea nosed out Billy Dettweiler, his playing companion, and Maj. J. R. McClure, by one stroke, after whizzing over the rugged back nine in 34 blows.

Dettweiler reached the turn in 37, same as Shea, but could not match Shea's brilliant birdie deuce on the twelfth hole and finished with a 35. Shea had eight pars and one birdie for a perfect incoming nine.

Match play opens Saturday.

Indians Crush Chisox, 17-2; Lose, 8-3

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 23.—The Cleveland Indians divided a doubleheader with Chicago today, burying the White Sox under a 17 to 2 score in the opener and dropping the nightcap, which was called at the end of the sixth inning on account of darkness, 8 to 3.

Bob Feller, 17-year-old pitching sensation, limited the White Sox to seven hits and struck out 10 in the opener. His teammates gave him a lot of help however, by pounding out 11 runs, including Hal Trosky's forty-second home run of the season, in the seventh inning and driving Vernon Kennedy from the mound.

Manor Is Given Maryland Golf Open Rally

Award Second of Season; Entries Received for Scotch Foursome.

Manor Club yesterday was awarded the Maryland State Open golf championship on October 14.

Awarding of the 36-hole championship to Manor marks the second important tournament of the season at the Norbeck course. The District championship, won by Bobby Brownell, was played at Manor a few weeks ago.

Professionals and assistants must post a $5 entry fee and amateurs a $3 fee. A total of $200 in cash prizes will be awarded. Entries close October 12.

Although only 30 had entered up to yesterday Dr. W. C. Barr, secretary of the District Golf Association, is anticipating a field of some 150 for the District mixed Scotch foursome championship at Columbia Country Club.

Dr. Barr will reecive entries at his office, National 7200. Golfers may make up their own foursomes, Dr. Barr stated. Post entries will be received, but those who enter early will get the best starting times.

Pairings:

McFarland Ends His Last Battle

By the Associated Press.

After two months illness, McFarland succumbed at his home in Joliet, Ill., with a streptococcus infection stopping his heart, the same heart that carried him to fame as one of the world's greatest lightweight boxers 25 years ago.

McFarland, christened Patrick Francis, was 48 years old. He is survived by a wife, three daughters and a son. Funeral services will be held at the McFarland home in Joliet at 9:30 o'clock Friday morning and a half an hour later at St. Raymond's Catholic Church. He will be buried in Mount Olivet Cemetery in Joliet. Members of

Election Year Fails to Halt Building Plans

Many Concerns Going Ahead With Large Expansion Projects.

New York, Sept. 23.—Many observers had believed that election uncertainties would restrict the expansion of production facilities this fall, but events are proving that the need for increased plant capacity will not be denied for any such artificial reason. Hardly a day passes without the announcement of a major expansion program. Among those listed so far this month by the Standard Statistics, of New York, are:

General Motors is spending $14,500,000 for machinery, tools and increased plant facilities to raise Buick's daily production capacity from 800 to 1,000 cars. E. I. du Pont is planning $2,000,000 plant at North Baton Rouge for the manufacture of ethyl fluid, and has completed plans for an increase in capacity of the cellophane plant at Ampthill, Va.

Industrial Rayon plans $3,000,000 Cleveland plant expansion for the production of cut stable fiber. This is in addition to the $7,500,000 continuous process mill, plans for which were announced early in the month.

Kelvinator will spend $600,000 to increase its production facilities by 25 per cent. Packard is doubling its capacity at a cost of more than $5,000,000. Republic Steel has let contracts for a new blast furnace at the Corrigan, McKinney works, to cost about $600,000. U. S. Steel is preparing 6 of its 12 National Tube Co. open hearth furnaces at Lorain, Ohio, for rebuilding.

Wheat in Chicago Is Slightly Lower

Chicago, Sept. 23 (AP).—Despite upturns to new peak prices for wheat today both sides of the Atlantic, wheat in Chicago finished mostly at net losses. The chief immediate stimulus for wheat market upturns came from Australian damage reports, indicating crop conditions in western Australia are the worst since 1914, and that south Australia is also suffering drought.

Chicago wheat futures closed unsteady at the same as yesterday's finish to ½ cent lower, September 116⅜, December 115½@115⅝, May 114¼@114⅜; Corn ¾ off to ⅞ up, September 110@110½, December 94¼@94⅜, May 89¾; oats unchanged to ½ down, December 42⅝, and rye unchanged to ⅜ advance, December 82⅝. Provisions results varied from 15 cents setback to a bulge of 22 cents.

Wave of Buying Sets Year's Peak In Steel Output

Week's Production Jumps to 73½ Per Cent of Normal Capacity.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 23.—Supported by a fresh wave of heavy buying, steel production has advanced this week to 73½ per cent of the country's capacity, the highest rate of the year thus far, "Iron Age" says today.

"Further gains in output are likely to be limited by physical factors at the mills and not by the volume of business," the Weekly Review stated, "Owing to restricted supplies of pig iron, scrap and coke and the fact that many open-hearth furnaces are still in disrepair, there is a scarcity of raw steel that is retarding operations of finishing mills.

"However, steel companies are straining to eliminate production bottlenecks insofar as possible. Makers of refractories are busy supplying fire brick for the rebuilding of open-hearth furnaces and new construction is being rushed, two new 150-ton open-hearth units having been started at a Chicago plant, with two more scheduled for initial operation in October."

The heavy volume of buying in the past week has been brought about partly by the desire of users to protect themselves as far ahead as possible on those products in which are to be $2 a ton higher in price as of October 1, the Review says.

An advance of 50 cents at Pittsburgh and one of 25 cents at Philadelphia raised the "iron age" composite price for heavy melting steel scrap to $16.75, where it is only $1.93 below the pig iron composite price, the narrowest differential that has existed between these two basic commodities in more than 20 years.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Irregular in Moderate Trading; Franc Crisis Develops; Wheat Dips.

New York, Sept. 23.—Securities were a shade darker today. Low-grade bonds held their speculative following, but Government issues softened. The majority of the standard industrial stocks merely backed and filled. Sales volume again was less than 1,500,000 shares. Toward the close prices were a little under the best, with slight losses numerous. December wheat closed ⅝ of a cent lower at 115½ cents a bushel.

Markets may be holding fire to await the effects of possible franc devaluation and also to find more evidence for judgment on the Presidential election. Meanwhile, the business news continues to sustain prices. Steel trade reviews at midweek tell of a "fresh wave of buying," of a shortage of raw steel, of a new high percentage of operation for the year and of generally increased activity, party to anticipate higher steel prices. At its present rate the steel mills probably are close to actual capacity operation, inasmuch as obsolescence and disrepair have rendered immediately useless a good deal of rated steel making capacity.

Transportation also continues to gain. Freight car loadings for last week are estimated at the highest since the autumn of 1930, and probably further gains will be made. Electrical output has increased to a new record top. The automotive industry is beginning to feel renewed demand with preparation of new models. The autumn trade revival has not been as abrupt as it sometimes is, but that may be the result of the high level during the summer. At least no actual recession so far has taken place on drought account.

Franc Crisis.

Although wary because of past experience with the tenacity with which France has maintained her present gold standard, some good foreign exchange authorities today declared in private conservations that the present crisis in France was the worst which has yet confronted that country and that the number of Frenchmen who considered devaluation inevitable was growing with the passing hours. The longer devaluation is delayed, the greater may be the reduction which might be required to bring France into line with countries whose currencies are undervalued in relation to francs. Possibly the French government is working, through restrictive measures against future dealings, to curtail the speculative position preparatory to devaluation.

Jitters.

One of the press dispatches today declared that some of the pressure upon future francs came from the Swiss National Bank, which was said to be suffering from an attack of nerves. Central banks have no nerves and with their superior sources of information have little reason for such ailments and, when they do get badly involved, as some of them did when England went off the gold standard, it merely becomes another problem for the Government to solve and to pay the bill.

Americans, even in the low salary and wage classes, have luxuries, easy working conditions and living scales that would knock the breath out of the average Frenchman or Englishman. Little provision needs to be made abroad for parking the automobiles in which workmen come to work at the British and French factories. And even as it is the situation, particularly in France, is just a trifle delicate because of the fearfully heavy public debt. Devaluation, i. e., repudiation, is about to be used as partial relief.

Time for Alarm.

If Americans had less confidence in Government bonds than they do at present, the ultimate safety of all obligations and of the currency unquestionably would be greatly enhanced. And are British and French bonds safe?

It is not unpatriotic to point out the dangers in our swollen debt and unbalanced budgets. On the contrary, a full realization of the danger is the best way of averting it.

The price of gold in London fell to the lowest figure since June, 1934, because of fresh weakness of pounds against sterling in Paris, the London-Paris cross rate at one time going above 77 francs to the pound. When it did so the British control authorities intervened with some vigor and kept the rate at 77 francs by purchases of French exchange, which, since they will be converted into gold, will further reduce French gold reserves. Apparently gold shipments to this country in increased volume, together with reported aid by the stabilization fund, were adequate to hold the franc unchanged against dollars, but its weakness in relation to sterling resulted in the pound selling above $5.07 here.

Boardroom Sweepings.

Texas Gulf Sulphur will earn its present dividend for the year in the first three quarters . . . Earnings of $6.50 a share are predicted for Chicago Flexible Shaft . . . Some Wall Street traders think the rails do not deserve as much attention as industrials with comparable earnings, for the roads will be more inclined to spend their income on maintenance than to pay extras . . . Hudson won't be able to pay a dividend before next July, but it has some backers. It will be able to escape the undistributed profits tax . . . Yellow Truck again is being talked for a move over the next few months . . . The silence of all hands round on the silver purchase act is golden for the silver mining shareholders, but it would be rather hollow in case the New Deal is upset.

A.T.T. Asks Permit For Sale of Bonds

New York, Sept. 23 (AP).—One of the largest corporate bond issues in the history of American finance was proposed today by American Telephone & Telegraph Co., in a registration statement filed with the Securities & Exchange Commission covering $175,000,000 of 3¼ per cent debentures. It stands as the largest issue registered so far under the Federal securities act.

At the same time the board ordered the call for redemption December 1, 1936, of $64,865,200 collateral trust 5 per cent bonds due in 1946 at a price of 105. Subject to the sale of the new bonds before November 1, the board likewise approved redemption on January 1, 1937, of $117,984,700 of 5 per cent debentures due in 1960 at 110.

Of the proposed new 3¼ per cent issue which will be due in 25 years, $150,000,000 will be sold to the public by a group of underwriters headed by Morgan Stanley & Co. In addition, $25,000,000 will be withheld for sale to the pension trust funds of Bell System Co.

Bank Posts Dividend.

The board of directors of the National Metropolitan Bank have declared a 3 per cent dividend to stockholders of record as of October 4, payable on October 15. The books will be closed for transfer of stock from October 5 to 15, inclusive.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, Sept. 23.—Large profit-taking sales were absorbed in today's stock market and there was active buying or railroad and oil securities. Motor, steel, tobacco and silk shares were in demand, selling at higher prices. Some mining issues declined under profit-taking sales, while transatlantic stock and German bonds held steady.

Paris—Prices reacted in the late dealings in the bourse and part of the early gains were lost. Securities of coal and electric companies were in supply and international issues, bank stocks and railroad shares moved irregularly. Bank of France shares closed at 6,780 francs against 6,650 Tuesday.

Hamilton Bank Deposits Gain 149 Per Cent

Institution Shows Profits of $555,000 for 3-Year Period.

The Hamilton National Bank opened for business September 25, 1933, with deposits of $8,725,451. Since that date the deposits have grown to $21,802,100, an increase of $13,076,649, or slightly less than 150 per cent.

The bank opened with a paid-in capital of $1,000,000 and a paid-in surplus of $250,000.

After paying all organization expenses and writing off premiums on securities, the earnings and profits of the bank for the three-year period have been roundly $555,000. The growth of the bank has been steady and consistent.

Of these earnings and profits, $200,000 were transferred to surplus, and two dividends amounting to $50,000 have been paid to the stockholders, leaving undivided profits account as of September 22, roundly $305,000. The capital and surplus of the bank on that date was $1,450,000.

E. C. Graham, elected president of the bank at the time of organization, continues as its head, the other officers are:

Brookland, J. L. Sherwood, manager, and W. H. Martin, jr., assistant; Dupont Circle, L. E. Schreiner, manager, and W. G. Baden, assistant; Northeast, George F. Hoover, manager, and Julian O. Cardin, assistant; Pennsylvania avenue, E. Gerstenberg, manager, and John H. Schooley, assistant; Potomac, C. W. Shoemaker, manager, and Elmore T. Burdette, assistant; Seventh street, John M. DeMarco, manager, and Francis J. Creamer, jr., assistant; Woodridge-Langdon, E. L. Norris, manager, and T. S. Mallon, jr., assistant.

Foreign Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

The discount on francs for future delivery declined a little after a wide increase in preceding sessions. For 90-day delivery the French currency was quoted around 6.07 cents, compared with 6.05 at yesterday's close. The spot franc rate was 6.58⅜, up .00⅛ of a cent.

While capital was said to be moving out of France to London and New York, the British pound declined ¼ of a cent to $5.06⅛ after touching a new peak for the last two years yesterday.

At London, the dollar closed at 5.06⅛ to the pound, compared with the overnight New York rate of 15.07⅛. The Paris closing was equivalent to 6.583 cents compared with the overnight New York rate of 6.582.

Notice of Redemption

Potomac Electric Power Company

General and Refunding Mortgage Gold Bonds, Series B, 6%, Due April 1, 1953.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that pursuant to the provisions of the General and Refunding Mortgage, dated October 1, 1921, of Potomac Electric Power Company to The National City Bank of New York, as Trustee (City Bank Farmers Trust Company, successor Trustee), Potomac Electric Power Company has exercised its option to redeem, and will redeem, in lawful money of the United States of America, on October 1, 1936, all of the General and Refunding Mortgage Gold Bonds, Series B, 6%, issued and outstanding thereunder which have not heretofore been called for redemption.

Accordingly, on October 1, 1936, all such General and Refunding Mortgage Gold Bonds, Series B, 6%, Due April 1, 1953 will become due and payable at the office of City Bank Farmers Trust Company, successor Trustee, 22 William Street, New York, N. Y., at the redemption price, viz., 105% of the principal amount thereof, plus interest accrued to October 1, 1936. After October 1, 1936 such Bonds will cease to bear interest and the coupons for interest maturing subsequent to that date will be void. Bonds surrendered for redemption should have attached all coupons maturing subsequent to October 1, 1936, and should be accompanied by appropriate ownership certificates required by the Federal Income Tax laws and regulations. Registered bonds should be accompanied by duly executed assignments or transfer powers.

Bondholders who wish to do so may present their Bonds with all interest coupons maturing subsequent to April 1, 1936, for redemption and payment in advance, prior to October 1, 1936, and upon so doing will receive the full redemption price of 105% plus interest to October 1, 1936.

Dated, July 2, 1936.

August Drought Curtails 1936 Cotton Output

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 23.—The 1936 cotton crop in the United States was seriously injured by dry weather during August. On the basis of conditions September 1, the Department of Agriculture estimated that the yield this year would amount to 11,121,000 bales (500 pounds gross weight), or 1,360,000 bales less than the previous month's forecast of 12,481,000 bales. The crop thus promises to be only 483,000 bales larger than last year's harvest of 10,638,000 bales. Such an increase will not be sufficient to offset the smaller carryover at the beginning of the current season when stocks on hand amounted to 5,397,000 running bales as against 7,209,000 bales last year, a decrease of 1,812,000 bales, according to the Alexnador Hamilton Institute.

While it is not possible to calculate exactly the total supply since the crop figure is expressed in 500 pound bales while the carryover is in running bales, a good idea of the situation may be obtained by adding together the crop and carryover figures. On the basis of this method the supply of domestic cotton for the current season may be estimated at 16,518,000 bales as against 17,847,000 bales last season, a decrease of 1,329,000 bales, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute.

From the standpoint of the supply situation, the price of cotton should average higher this season than last, especially since the price last season failed to respond to the inflationary movement. While the price is already above last season's average, a further advance appears to be warranted. Should the general inflationary movement be extended next year, the price of cotton should advance quite sharply from the present level. There are some grounds for believing, however, that the inflationary movement may receive a set-back in 1937. Under such circumstances, the prospective rise in the price of cotton would be modified.

On the Air Today

Ethel Barrymore was only fooling a few weeks ago when she announced she would never again appear on a radio program. So much so that she has done quite the contrary; she has signed to do her first air series.

The "first lady of the American stage" will re-live her theatrical career in dramatic plays to be presented over the N. B. C. net beginning Wednesday, October 7. The first production is to be "Capt. Jinks of the Horse Marines," in which she played her first starring role in 1901.

Among the other Barrymore successes in view for radio version are "The Doll's House," "Trelawney of the Wells," "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire," "Lady of the Camelias," "Declassee," "Clair de Lune" and "School for Scandal." And, of course, "The Kingdom of God," with which she opened the Ethel Barrymore Theater in New York.

Here and there: Uncle Arthur Godfrey favored me a day or two ago with a special playing of the new records of his new band—and methinks the band is very smart, indeed. Uncle Arthur is very smart, too. He refuses to be lured away from Washington by trick offers to make a big name for himself nationally on the networks, Arthur and his band probably will do the network job from WJSV's studios right here in town—or he won't do it at all! . . . WRC relayed its studio programs to the transmitter on Fourteenth street by means of battery auxiliary power when the Press Club Building's electric current blew out yesterday. The announcers worked their continuities by flashlight.

Carleton Smith is back in town after having covered approximately 1,000 miles a week since early summer as president announcer for N.B.C. . . . Politics finally has caught up with "Curbstone Queries." Beginning next Monday "Curbstone" will be heard Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at 12:15 instead of five times weekly at 12. The politicians get the other days . . . With the "One Man's Family" episode last night, Carlton Morse rounded out 1,750,000 words of script on this show. Negotiations are now under way to make a movie version of the popular serial.

• • • •

From the mail: "We are sorry to have five minutes taken off 'Curbstone Queries' by Mr. McGrath. The other two announcers have never cut the time down. It has always been on full 15 minutes. Doesn't he like you two? We much prefer your broadcast to music sponsored by an old beer company."

Well, first, the much maligned Mr. McGrath is really not responsible for this reduction in "Curbstone's" time. He just does what he's told to do about the matter. However, we do have to "give" when such elements as beer and politics (note above) enter into the broadcast day. To be real truthful about it all, Mr. McGrath really is a very good friend of both "Curbstoners."

Violence Used To End Strikes, Senators Hear

pound former bodyguard for Vivian Gordon, Broadway butterfly, who was mysteriously murdered in 1931, told of his 20 years' strike-breaking experience, during which he worked "for anybody that paid off."

Jack "Eat-Em-Up-Alive" Fisher, describing himself as a "chief noble" (a "noble" is a boss of a gang of "finks"), revealed he once was discharged for sleeping on the job. He said the strikebreaking business "is just like a club, except I wouldn't trust nobody in it."

Tells of Bookkeeping.

A. E. Lawson, Youngstown, Ohio, public accountant, told how he had kept books nearly four years for two dovetailed companies, the National Corporation Service, and the Allied Corporation Service — the first being a labor espionage "stool-pigeon business," the second, "an out-and-out strikebreaking organization."

Lawson recited a lengthy list of corporations using the services, including the Wheeling Steel Corporation, the Johnson Bronze Co., the Ohio Light & Power Co., the Ohio Edison Co., the Newton Steel Co., the Columbus Railway Light & Power Co., the Otis Steel Co., the Goodrich Tire, General Tire and Firestone Rubber companies.

Kuhl, told of a preacher, the Rev. R. J. Bunch, of Leavittsburg, Ohio, who he said was hired by operatives to act as a "hooker" in a power plant strike in Warren, Ohio.

Kuhl, his broken nose and scarred face eloquent proof of his strike-breaking efforts through the years, entertained the close-packed audience and the two examining Senators, Robert La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, and Elbert D. Thomas (Democrat), Utah, for nearly two hours with frank and smiling revelations of his career.

He said that in the New Orleans street car strike of July, 1929, he and about 125 other "finks" were shipped to the scene by E. E. McGuffin, president of the National Corporation Service, allegedly allied with the Railway Audit & Inspection Co., to break the strike, in which 80 men had "walked out."

Tells of Salaries.

"The finks slept and fed in the barns," said Kuhl. "That saves money and is safer. McGuffin got $50 salary a day and $50 expenses and a bonus. His assistant, Charles Williams, got $25 a day and a bonus. Williams got his bonus as long as he did not drink, Kuhl said.

"We each got $20 a day. The finks kept all the money that came into the street cars we were running and did a lot of gambling at night. The chief finks, the lieutenants, took their cut by running the games. On the street car take, the motorman took one-third, the conductor got one-third and the barn man got a third."

Senator La Follette interrupted to ask: "And what did the company get?"

"Nothing," laughed Kuhl. The spectators roared.

Later Kuhl told of a job he did for the Johnson Bronze Co. in Newcastle, Pa. The girls who toiled in the plant received 10 cents an hour for their work, he said, and the company heads feared trouble, so they employed operatives from strike-breaking agencies for 18 months.

A strike began then, he said, with riots in which gas was used and bricks flung. He continued:

"Glen Fisk, a street operative, was in the picket line with the union men, throwing bricks. I was in the company's line. He said later he'd thrown bricks at me."

Kuhl described how women operatives, or "missionary workers," were trained for "street work." This latter was described by the witness as follows: The operative visits homes throughout a union section, passing as a salesman, getting into conversations with wives and mothers of strikers, and attempting to break down their morale by picturing the strike as hopeless. Later other street operatives follow up good contacts and prey on the fears of the workers' families that the jobs will be irretrievably lost.

Arrested in Akron.

Kuhl also revealed that he had been arrested by police in Akron for attempting to break up a union meeting. Kuhl's technique, he said, was to create disturbances in the Akron union meetings, which were held in schoolhouses, the only available public buildings. Public indignation at property destruction would result in the unions being barred from the school buildings, thus "slowing up the union work for a while," smiled Kuhl. He added:

"McGuffin had sent me to Akron with a bunch of gorillas—strong arm men—and Felix Kaplan, who was pretty hot as a soapbox orator. Kaplan and me went to the meetings, and he was supposed to get up and make a speech, but he failed to connect.

"Next Sunday we went back again, but Kaplan didn't do his stuff this time, either. We couldn't talk it over, as we're supposed to be on different sides of the fence. So next time I began busting up the meeting—just destroying a little property, breaking chairs and windows, but I got caught. The police arrested me and J. P. South, who was working with me. We'd had union cards to get in. South was caught with his card on him. I told the cops I was out of work, but they questioned South thoroughly. He didn't know any more about making tires than making watches, and they tripped him up a lot, but McGuffin got us an attorney, who got a fixer, who fixed up the judge O. K."

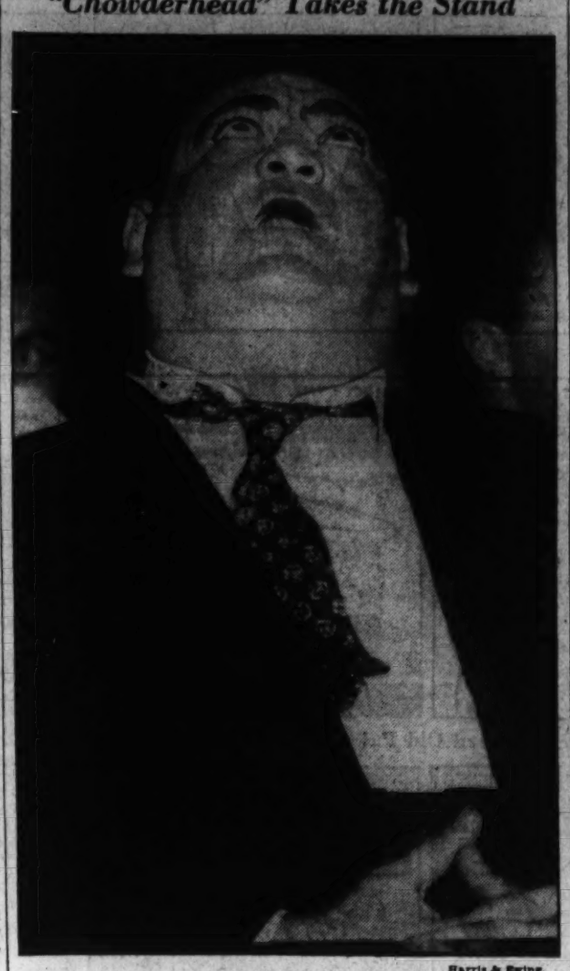
Charge Reports Doctored.

Some of the high spots of the day came with the revelations of methods by which the strikebreakers doctored reports to companies to make strikes appear more serious, thus arousing the companies to the expenditure of more money.

The appearance of the bulky, waddling "Chowderhead Sam" Cohen caused a stir in the hearing room. Cohen, 50, his great nose broken in a fight years ago, muttered his answers, telling the Senators he "had charge of the elevator strike job" in New York last year.

"I run the whole job for the Sherwood Agency," he boasted. When La Follette asked him about his police record, he snapped: "I don't think this is the right time to ask a question like that." The Senator then introduced for the record a list of 14 arrests and 5 convictions in New York for Cohen, ranging from receiving stolen goods, through burglary to impersonating a Federal officer and attempted extortion. Cohen has served time in Sing Sing and Atlanta and was a material witness in the Vivian Gordon murder case.

"Chowderhead" Takes the Stand



Harris & Ewing.

Sam Cohen, alias "Chowderhead," an admitted strikebreaker for a period of over 20 years, told the Senate Civil Liberties Committee that "he bossed the job" during the New York elevator strike and since then has been on the Remington-Rand strike in Connecticut.

Glossary of Terms Of Strikebreakers

Hooker—an operative who inveigles union men into acting as spies on their fellows, and keeps them "hooked" by threatening to expose them to the unions.

Missionary-worker—an operative who spreads propaganda to break down strikers' morale by preying on the fears of strikers' wives or mothers.

Elected Atlanta Mayor.

VenderGranted Stand on Plea Of First Lady

But it took the intervention of Mrs. Roosevelt—for the second time in recent years—to convince District authorities that Steve should be allowed to continue his flourishing peanut-popcorn-chewing gum business which he established outside the White House gates 27 years ago.

In spite of the First Lady's aid, however, Steve was forced to move his two-wheeled push cart across Pennsylvania avenue. At his former place of business, on the corner of East, Executive avenue, Steve and the cart allegedly had become a traffic hazard. Complaints forced police to act.

He was arraigned in police court yesterday, but Judge Robert Mattingly continued the case until September 30. Meanwhile, Stephen Early, White House secretary, forwarded to Commissioner Allen Mrs. Roosevelt's plea that Steve be reinstated. Her letter read in part:

"I would myself miss him on that corner. We had better let him stand at the White House gates."

When complaints against Steve first reached police last week, he was given 48 hours to move. He left, only to return the next day. And then—push cart and all—he was loaded into a patrol wagon and taken to the Third Precinct Station. There he was charged with "stopping longer than necessary to make a sale."

"I'm-a good-a fella'," he said, shifting his peanut sacks into a neat pile. "I always try to do right thing. I got-a many frans—they good-a people. If police want to lock-a me up . . . all-a right. Let 'em. I don' care. I do nothing wrong. Just-a sell peanuts."

Mrs. Zegowitz Suicide, Is Coroner's Decision

A certificate of suicide was issued yesterday by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald in the death Monday of Mrs. Elizabeth Zegowitz, 67, of 612 Q street northwest.

Mrs. Zegowitz was found unconscious in the kitchen of her home by her two sons, William and John. They told police three gas jets were open on the stove.

Dean at Columbia Upholds Ouster

New York, Sept. 23 (AP).—Dean Herbert E. Hawkes, of Columbia University today denied reinstatement in the college to Robert H. Burke, of Youngstown, Ohio, president-elect of the junior class, in a letter addressed to Burke and made public by the university's department of public information.

Burke was dismissed from the college last June after he reputedly led a demonstration in front of President Nicholas Murray Butler's home to protest participation by Columbia in the anniversary ceremonies of Heidelberg University.

"The university can not give its diploma marking achievement and excellence to a student who is a ringleader in this kind of affair and who thereafter indicates he does not fully understand the personal misconduct involved," Dean Hawkes wrote in his letter to Burke.
